and I know it was true, because it was not in the usual style and his appearance is not like the ordinary man that strays in that Been a prosperous merchant; once way. owned $400,000, so he says. How'd he lose Indorsed a man's note; had a little trouble with his boy, and then everything went wrong. Wife died; he got slack in business and his money all went someway.

Once a Prosperous Merchant

He's No. 7 on the docket and you bet he'll have plenty of company 'fore morning. Just then the big gong struck and all gave a start. It was a fire alarm, but in a distant ward and out of that district.

"Well, Joe Smith's in again to-night," smid the Sergeant, after the speculation as to the location of the fire had ceased, "We must do something with him."

"Too had about that fellow, isn't it?" moke up the Captain. "Joe is one of the finest lawyers of the bar if he would only let "bonze" alone. And moneyl you bet he can make all he wants."

"Do you remember when he used to come down with his pockets full of eigars and hand them around and want to look through the juil?" said the Sergeant, "Well, come in! Did you think gas had gone down, or this was a meat refrigerator?" And two more lodgers walked in.

MORE OF THE SERGEANT'S CHAFF.

"I suppose you're out of work, or your great grandmother died and failed to leave you a house and let, didn't she? or, didn't the 'bumper special' from Philadelphia have a sleeper. Oh, ves, I suppose you can stay, if you behave yourselves. Come along; but you must skip out in the morn-ing or the Judge may give you six months."

The Sergeant turned and gave his com-rades a sly wink as the two fellows falteringly disappeared behind the iron doors. As it stood ajar a wail of discordant voices was wafted out-of men cursing and the babble of drunken men, while from the far end, occupied by the women's de-far end, occupied by the women's de-partment, came a sound of sobbing from some miserable woman or girl The lodgers came in fast, and their tales were as varied as they were in character and appearance. One said he was a farmer, but had lost his money in a little attempt to increase his store by speculating in stocks through a friend. Several others were mechanics, one was a draughtsman of no little skill as evinced by the box of instruments and drawings he showed as his sole posses-sions. He had had bad inck getting a job, and probably spoiled his chances by taking a few glasses to cheer him up. One was a gas fitter, and so on down the list of occupa-tions. Some had become regular tramps, floating helplessly from city to city. Others which probably had histories. It was after S o'clock and no more "lodgers" applied or were brought in before the dawn of day. It had not been an excep-tionsi night at Central. The scenes are varied each night. Sometimes a doctor has New York City itself-the metropolis of to be called in a hurry to attend to some man or woman who has received injuries in a fight, or a murder or fire makes things lively. All these occurrences are familiar to the public. ALLEN. Read Them Carefully.

SUGGESTIONS FOR SPRING r Prices, $1, 75, 50, 25c

When you make your purchases at the "Money-Saving Stores for the People," you reserve financial strength, preserve patience, time and money beyond a limit, unknown in any other house in the two cities-savings is getting; but saving here has a wondrous significance of its own; an inimitable quality unapproached by the lowest of low prices. It means the obtaining of goods of the very highest st andard at prices unequaled for their lowness. No misrepresentations, but GOOD GOODS and HONEST VALUES at figures far below the most aggressive competition.
