A Hint to Hotel Keepers-A Cellar Not a Good Place for Saloon and Restaurant-Guarding Against a Gambling Annex-Close of the Day's Proceedings.

When the Second ward list was taken up Anderson & Rowan, of the Central Hotel, were told by Judge Ewing: "You have made your bar a big affair. You have not been as careful as you should have been. I have heard complaints about it. You should give it your personal attention more closely. mention this for the sake of the future."

Thomas J. Blackmore applied for a license for the basement at the corner of Water and Smithfield streets under the room which is now occupied by a cigar store. He said he intended to put in a restaurant as well as a barroom. The Judges shook their heads rather dubiously. "This," said Judge Ewing, "is an old-fisshioned house with a cellar good for storing molasses and sugar. I never would think of putting a restaurant and a saloon in that cellar. It is en-tirely below the surface of the street. The trouble is that he has only one part of the building. We have found that where a saloon occupies a part of a building and the proprietor has nothing to do with the rest of the premises, gambling rooms and the like may drift into it."

west of here. On reaching their house a fight ensued, which resulted in both Mexicans being killed and Broome receiving a serious wound in the shoulder. Shields was also slightly shot in the left hand. John K. Durr was recalled and asked if he had any interest in the application of E. K. Porter. He said that he had none what-ever. He had merely signed the bond as an nodation.

John H. Brown applied for the premise at No. 195 Second avenue, where there is now a boarding house called the Bull's Hend. He said that not a drop of liquor had been sold on the premises within the last two years. Judge Ewing said: "Two years ago this had become a common sort of boarding house, and beer and whisky were sold on a $100 license." Neville Bayley applied for a renewal of the license at the Cate Bayley, No. 407 Smithfield street. Mr. Bayley was the handsomest man so far before the court. Judge Ewing usked:

Mr. Bayley do you control the entire building now?"

"Yes, sir." "That's all."

This was the shortest examination.

Daniel Brady, at the corner of Ross street and Second avenue, was next. He was granted license for 1889 by Judge White and was not detained long.

HAD OFTEN HEARD OF IT.

John Drew put in a plea for the rather notorious place on the northeast corner of Water and Grant streets. In 1888 he ap-plied for a wholesale license. The former lessee of the place, Fiester, was licensed in 1888, but rejused last year. Drew said that the barroom had since been vacant. He owns the building, and had fixed it up for an eating and lodging house. Judge Ewing said: "This place has a very bad name. We have often heard of it in the Criminal Court." City Solicitor Elphinstone, of Allegheny, made a brave attempt to present his client's case in a favorable light. Judge Ewing finally said to Drew: "If you can keep a decent hotel there you are entitled to a great deal of credit."

John F. Dignam and son applied for a license for No. 10 Smithfield street, the Labelle Hotel, opposite the entrance to the Monongahela House. Mr. Dignam said that he kept a notel, with 14 rooms, and had a room for a bar 30 feet long. He had never bad a liquo. license, although he applied last year. Judge White could not see it.

ON THE LITTLE LIST.

Judge Ewing said: "Your house is on the speak-casy list." Mr. Dignam explained that some of his roomers had beer delivered to them, but they bought it and drank it themselves. In 1888 Diebold asked for a license at this place, was refused and bought out another fellow's license on the South-side. Dignam had been keeping a restaurant on Carson street, near South Twelfth. Judge Ewing said: "It is unfortunate that a man's roomers should get him into trouble."

Philip Eckert, who runs a barber shop at No. 52 Diamond street, half a dozen doors below the Central Police station, thinks he can make more money with a saloon and restaurant. The place is an old restaurant site, and had formerly a good patronage. Mr. Eckert said that he had never kept either a saloon or a speak-easy. He has the lease of both stories of the building. Until two years ago he kept a lodging and eating house at No. 32 Diamond square. He quit that because he thought he could do better at barbering. "Can't you do better by stay-ing in the barber business?" asked Judge Ewing. "No, I don't think so," said Mr. Eckert, "if I can get a license." He said that he had the capital to fix up a decent restaurant.

IN FOR BOTH LICENSES. Michael M. Frey, No. 60 and 62 Diamond street, opposite the rear of the Opera House, wants to add a bar to his restaurant. His dining room is 30x80 feet, and his family lives upstairs. He feeds 50 or 60 people daily. He formerly kept a restaurant on Fifth avenue near Marion street. He has applied also for a wholesale license.

John A. and George L. Filson, have leased, they said, No. 318 Grant street, at the corner of Fourth avenue, and promise to run a restaurant it they get a license. They have the lower floor of No. 318 and the upper floors of both Nos. 316 and 318. Judge Ewing said: "It would be pretty hard for the best man in the county to keep a respectable place in those buildings." George Filson said that he had been four years in the restaurant business. He was incapable of doing hard labor. The brothers are both unmarried. James H. Filson asked for a license for No. 209 Grant street, a three-story brick building. He had a 30-foot room for a bar-room and a room 15 by 15 for a dining room. Judge Ewing did not like the size of th proposed dining room and he said the place had a tough reputation. A man named had a tough reputation. A man named Gibson kept a saloon there a few years ago. SHORT AND SWEET.

Charles G. Goodwin appeared for himself and his brother, Thomas J., or the restaurant and saloon on Fourth avenue under the Petroleum Exchange. He spoke of the meals they serve and was dismissed without questioning. When Charles S. Gill, the well-known proprietor of the St. Charles Hotel, smiled up to the bench, Judge Ewing, with a mischievous twinkle, asked;

"Where is your barroom?" "In the St. Charles Hotel."

"How many doors to it have you?"

"Two." "I never saw but one. That is all."

Captain Bardele Gallisaith, of No. 48 Diamond street, was briefly questioned. He is a well-known old soldier, and was licensed by Judge Ewing in 1888. Last year Judge White cut him off. Judge Ewing simply asked

"Have you, since your license expired, obeyed the law?"

'I have.' "You have been in the business how long? "In the restaurant business since 1865."
