were un. They cut each other's throats, and the general looked at him, frowning, asking himself if he had heard aright, and Araquil remained there, standing before him, very pale.

And the fellow said it in a decided tone that he would not be snatched away, and signed to his officers to leave him alone with the man.

At morning there rises a beautiful star. The said, the most beautiful in the sky. But on 13th day, there is one more brilliant.

Which was not his equal in the sky. As water runs toward the vale. Since that Easter Monday, Juan Araquil, nearly dead, lay in a bed, growing gloomy, speaking little, and old Tiburcio Chegaray, down there, rarely smiled now.

"What I did myself," concluded the farmer. "Work, and bring enough into the family to feed the children, and I don't tell all my life to throw my money and my daughter to a man who goes for no reason to the other. When you come and see that the man who is your property and that you can bring your share of bread and salt to table, you shall have Papa, since she loves you."

It was the surgeon of the Carlist detachment who had been sent for him. The officers grew impatient. Zucarraga, smiling, very gentle, making a sign with his hand, was saying: "Wait. Perhaps you will have to wait a while for the treatment with the catarrh specialists at 323 Penn avenue of the result he says: 'This is to be done in the next few days, and you can be cured in a few days.'"

"I have no doubt that you will get them, but I will get them." He had even reached the point, poor Juan, of thinking of some great journey. They told him that far away, at La Plata, in America, emigrant Basques sometimes made their fortunes. The Basques were large, muscular men, and they were not afraid of a young fellow of Hernani, who earned money in that way, in the south of the New World.
