

A LIST ABOUT READY. Some Liquor Dealers to Learn of Their Luck To-Night. WHOLESALERS COME NEXT. No Court To-Day or To-Morrow, and No More Retailers. TO BE HEARD TILL THURSDAY

Judges Ewing and Magee will this evening give out, for publication to-morrow morning, a list of the applicants who will be granted licenses to sell liquor at retail. They will work at this list all day, and at just what hour the work will be finished Judge Ewing said he could not say.

There will be no court to-day. The further hearing of applicants for retail licenses was adjourned until next Thursday morning, April 10. Then the city of Allegheny will be finished.

The wholesale applications will be taken up next Monday morning, at 9:30 o'clock, and pushed rapidly for three days. "I will get through the wholesale licenses in three days," said Judge Ewing, "and all good liquor will be in the hands of the consumer."

NO DELAY AT ALL. COURT BEGINS WORK PROMPTLY IN THE MORNING.

Late Sessions Don't Prevent Early Rising.—A Lawyer Appears as Friend of an Applicant.—How He Was Refused Before. There were no preliminaries in the morning. The judges, notwithstanding their late conference of the preceding night, were in their seats promptly, and Frank Schilling was called. He applies for No. 4 Hope street, near the Ft. Wayne Railroad bridge, where he runs an eating house. Beginning in 1881, he kept a saloon, but for four years on a $100 license, and for three years on a $300 license. He presented letters of commendation from Health Officer James Bradley and Nicholas Seibert.

John Sigmond applied for the corner of Madison avenue and Laocock street, where he owns several houses. He lives in the North ward of Pittsburgh. He has been a grocer and hatter, and the room where he desires to set up his bar has been a grocery store for 25 years. George Stuenkel, No. 83 Chestnut street, keeps a boarding house. A keg of beer for his own use has been delivered at his house weekly, but he declared that he did not sell any. Judge Ewing expressed great doubt as to whether he should be granted a license. He said that he had accommodated many applicants, but he said that he would not accommodate a stranger for whom he had no recommendation. Stuenkel's son has applied for a wholesale license at the corner of Federal street and Church street, but he has no recommendation. He has a license for two years under the Brooks law. Judge Ewing said that he would not grant a license to a man who had no recommendation. Stuenkel's son has applied for a license at No. 32 Chestnut street, facing the West Penn railroad, but he has no recommendation. Charles E. Wolfendale, proprietor of the Grand House at the corner of Federal street and Allegheny street, is in all right. William Young, applying for No. 48 South Diamond, is keeping a restaurant. He has a license for two years under the Brooks law. He never kept a saloon. Instead of dealing out the adulterated booze he has vended the seductive but deadly candy.

When Joseph Blatter, who keeps a license framed in his barroom at No. 212 Rebecca street, was called up, both he and his attorney, Hon. Arthur Kennedy, were somewhat shocked when Attorney Christie asked for a postponement. He had sent out subpoenas for witnesses, and the case went over until after the noon recess. Mr. Blatter appeared to feel pained by such conduct on the part of Mr. Christie, and looked at the yellow-headed lawyer very reproachfully. John Casey desires to keep a bar at the corner of Western avenue and Chartiers street.

Herbald Edgerton, No. 105 Pennsylvania avenue, is an old saloon keeper. He has never sold on Sunday after Pearson became Mayor. "The difficulty with him is," said Judge Ewing, "that his opinions are so greatly at variance with the law. Mr. Edgerton was so sorely disappointed because he did not get a license in 1888 that he went to Europe, but finally concluded to come back. "Did he lose confidence in the Government?" asked Judge Ewing. "Oh, no," said Attorney Cohen, "it is a great admirer of this democratic government." The judges looked skeptical, and Mr. Edgerton may be given an opportunity to make another European trip this spring.

John J. Gavin applies for No. 75 Ridge avenue. His wife was refused license a year ago, and they have been running a boarding house. Elinhard Hohmann, Chartiers street and Hopkins alley, was refused in 1888 and 1889, and said that he did not know why. He has been keeping an eating house. Colonel W. J. Moore appeared for Mr. Hohmann. He said: "I appear as his friend, rather than his attorney. I have known him for many years. He is a well-to-do, industrious, honest and sober man, and that he has kept a saloon, and that he is a licensed saloon keeper. He is an old-fashioned lawyer very reproachfully. John Casey desires to keep a bar at the corner of Western avenue and Chartiers street.

SKIPPED AWAY TO EUROPE. Herbold Edgerton, No. 105 Pennsylvania avenue, is an old saloon keeper. He has never sold on Sunday after Pearson became Mayor. Mr. Edgerton was so sorely disappointed because he did not get a license in 1888 that he went to Europe, but finally concluded to come back. for seven years, until 1888. He had a pretty good record before that. Sam McCarney, No. 125 Rebecca street, is a blacksmith. Martin Oliver, No. 74 Rebecca street, took out a license for a drinking club and has been suspended. On promise to quit his saloon was suspended. He has recently been working in the La Belle Street Works. Mrs. Johanna Pfeil, No. 79 Chartiers street, has been licensed under the Brooks law. She was kept before the bench only a moment, and the noon recess was then taken.

BEER IN BUCKETS. SOME SIGNIFICANT QUESTIONING BY MR. CHRISTY. Several Applicants Warned to Be More Careful if They Are Successful—One Man's Advice to the Judges—A Number of Pertinent Questions Asked.

After the noon recess, Joseph Blatter, of No. 212 Rebecca street, corner of Allegheny avenue, was called again. Mr. Christie had been unable to find his witnesses. Mr. Blatter has been licensed continuously for five years. Mr. Christie interrogated the applicant closely. To Judge Ewing Mr. Blatter explained that his restaurant is not the house numbered 212, but on the second floor of the adjoining house, over the postroom. Judge Ewing did not like that. Judge Ewing said that he had no doubt that there was, but that he did not swear to it. George Hausbeck, No. 31 Pennsylvania avenue, was recalled. He swore that he had obeyed the law. The applicant was put through a tough course of questioning by Mr. Christie. Police Officer Eberhardt, who was called, Mr. Christie said that Eberhardt was an unwilling witness. The officer testified that he had seen no disorder at Hausbeck's place, but that one evening he had arrested a man named Brown, who was drunk, and had been refused a license to sell liquor at retail. Eberhardt said that he had been many times in Hausbeck's place. "I am satisfied that, in the way you have been selling bottled beer, you have violated the spirit of the law at least, have great doubts whether you have any right to bottle beer."

Mr. Hausbeck—Has a man got any rights to bottle whisky? MUST BE VERY STRICT. Judge Ewing—I am not passing on that. Practically, I think you sell more than a quart at a time, although you sell only one bottle to each man in a party. If you get license this time you must be very strict. John Sheehan, No. 12 Manhattan street, is a carriage painter. Charles M. Short, No. 100 Beaver avenue, has always been in the saloon business. He said: "I would bar for my grandchild, but I would not bar for my own self." John M. Tarry, who will not be 22 years old until the next 1st of January, applied for a license at No. 85 Rebecca street. His father's death caused the transfer of the license to the son. John M. Tarry applied for a license for his own use, but he was refused. He said that he had been a number of years in the saloon business, and that he had never had any trouble with the law. The highest amount for which this gave him a license was $100. Judge Ewing told him that he had no right to open so early. Judge Ewing said: "If you get a license this time it will be only on trial, and because you have a better record than most others."

Mr. Anna M. Woerle, applying for No. 78 Rebecca street, is the widow of a saloonkeeper. Her husband was licensed for two years under the Brooks law. Judge Ewing said that he would not grant a license to a man who had no recommendation. Stuenkel's son has applied for a license at No. 32 Chestnut street, facing the West Penn railroad, but he has no recommendation. Charles E. Wolfendale, proprietor of the Grand House at the corner of Federal street and Allegheny street, is in all right. William Young, applying for No. 48 South Diamond, is keeping a restaurant. ANOTHER RECORD DEVELOPED. Michael Sturk, applying for No. 203 Beaver avenue, is a gentleman with a very red face and no hair at all. It was developed by Mr. Christie that Sturk had been in trouble with the law as the result of an assault on Paul Bauer, and that Sturk's daughter was under bond for $1000. Anthony Clark has a license at Nos. 284 and 286 Beaver avenue. He is a little old man with a white neck. He had been threatened with a prosecution for selling to a minor, but claimed that the charge was made by a woman who was mad because Clark had asked her for keeping a vicious dog. Johanna Fierle, No. 154 Franklin street, is the widow of a man who was carried into Ligon Court a year ago, wrapped in blankets. She was taken to the hospital, and died there in a few days. Alexander Fischer, who applies for No. 25 Adam street, was forced out of the business two years ago. He was born in Europe and has enjoyed elegant leisure generally.

WANTS TO LIFT A MONTAGE. Mrs. Sophia Gehlbach, No. 209 Junata street, is the widow of a saloon keeper. She keeps boarders. She said that her husband died in debt and she did not feel able to run a regular restaurant without a liquor license. "His property is so heavily mortgaged," said Attorney Marrow, "that she will lose it if she does not secure a license." Mrs. Mary Heckman, No. 297 Beaver avenue, keeps boarders, and sells toys and notions. She has been a beer bar by the leg delivered at her house. Hiram J. Haller, who wishes a license at No. 27 Beaver avenue, was born in this county, and has lived 50 years in the Sixth ward of Allegheny. He has been a cigar-maker, but
