A LEADER IS DYING.

PHYSICIANS GIVE HIM UP.

And Express Fear That He May Not Live Till Morning.

HIS BRILLIANT, USEFUL CAREER

Hon. Samuel J. Randall's long illness is apparently nearly ended. Late last night his physicians expressed tears that he would not live until morning. An interesting sketch of his life is appended.

IFROM A STAFF CORRESPONDENT. 1

WASHINGTON, April 11 .- All day the family and relatives and other immediate friends of ex-Speaker Randall have waited anxiously in the fear that each occasional spasm of pain would end in the final dissolution of the dying statesman. These spasms were not severe, but they were sufficient at times to sadly shake the patient's feeble form. Late this evening the physicians announced that Mr. Randall was sinking very rapidly, and expressed the fear that he would not live through the night.

Through the day, aside from the spasms referred to, Mr. Randall rested easily, though for the most part in a semi-conscious state, rarely giving any sign of recognition day, the physicians giving absolute orders to this effect; and so all callers were either briefly informed that the patient was alive and resting easily, or were referred to the dectors, Mallon and Lincoln, who have been in almost continuous consultation and attendance during the day. Small quantities of liquid nourishment were fed the patient from time to time, and occasionally a draught of medicine, the latter mostly for the purpose of relieving pain.

While the doctors have at no time stated positively that there was no hope, their treatment during the last 24 hours, has been that of a patient for whom they had abandoned hope. Drs. Martin and Agnew, the Philadelphia physicians who have called, were apparently satisfied they could do nothing by remaining here. Unless, therefore, an almost miraculous change takes place death is a question of only a short time, and, in the condition of the patient, would not be a surprise if it came at any

HIS OLD PRIENDS' SORROW. Though the long sickness of Mr. Randall has led his many friends to look on his death as a possibility at any time, and his vacant chair in the House has constantly suggested that its long-time honored occupant would never sit there again, these things have hardly tempered the emotion with which old members of the House dall. He has embodied so much of the vigor and magnetism of the House for so many years that he will be missed more than any other man of his time.

All of the old members and most of the later ones have called to show their concern and respect, and this evening, when death is expected at any moment, there is a constant succession of cabs and carriages, of members, citizens and newspaper correspondents. A crowd stands all the time in the street in front of the modest residence, while the car-riages stop a block distant. LIGHTNER.

born in Philadelphia, October 10, 1828, and was the son of an eminent lawyer. His mother was the daughter of James Worrell, a Democratic leader in the days of Jefferson, but Randall, without organization or serious so that the ex-Speaker may be said to have been a Democrat by inheritance as well as by conviction. His first position in public life was as a member of the City Council of Philadelphia wherein he showed marked ability, and was soon transferred to the Senate of his native State. The beginning of the Civil War prompted Mr. Bandall to enter military service in the

THE GUSKY MEMORIAL.

The above is a representation of the J. M. Gusky Hebrew Orphanage and Retreat for the Aged, to be built on the Perrysville road. On the first floor are situated the reception rooms, a schoolroom, and parlors for the inmates. The second floor contains the dormitories for the children and old people, with bathrooms and living rooms; while on the third and uppermost floor are well-aired infirmary wards, and the rooms of those in charge of the institution. In the basement there is extensive cellarage, and here also are located the culinary department and a playroom for the children. The outward appear ance of the building is very graceful, and it has a substantial look without being in the least cumbersome or ungainly. election of G. W. Keifer. He was ever an outspoken advocate of a judiciously adjusted pro-tective tariff, and never wavered from his posi-tion, except when monopoly and not protection was the object sought to be attained. The free trade papers were unanimous in their antagon-ism to his candidacy for Speaker of the Forty-eighth Congress, and Carlisle, of Kentucky, was chosen to the position. In the early part of 1885 Mr. Randall made a tour of the South,

AN INTELLECTUAL GIANT. Without being a particularly scholarly man or a finished orator, Mr. Randall was a most powerful figure in American politics of the period. Differing from a majority of his party on one subject that has been an issue of very recent years he was not an acknowledged leader, yet during the past three sessions that the leadership was elsewhere there were times when the party turned to him as the man best fitted to fight their difficult battles. There was when the party turned to him as the man destricted to fight their difficult battles. There was probably no other man from whom a few words had such an influence upon the House in relation to fiscal affairs, and in a parliamentary struggle he always arose above the whole House. When deeply in earnest on any subject he attained the proportions of a glant, and with heavy blows dealt on either hand, he brusned the hundred and one smaller men of the House out of his path.

As head of the Appropriations Committee and possessing wider knowledge of fiscal affairs than any other man in the House, he practically controlled the appropriations for the entire Government. Through him the policy of "retrenchment and reform" became an attribute of the Democratic party, and it was this battle cry that drew support to the party and brought it from the obscurity of defeat in which it groped for years after the war. Whatever bitterness may have arisen from the differences of opinion on the tariff question, the ablest of the tariff reformers always respected the iron-nerved giant of Pennsylvania as one of the most powerful men in the party. He has stood for years, extending back into the time when the party was weak and disorganized, as the CHAMPION OF INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS and of honest and economical administration watch dog of the Treasury, but he has been the guard-at times almost the lone guard-of the party organization. He was undoubtedly one of the greatest men in his party. They have, perhaps, had no other man before the public, excepting Tilden and Cleveland, of equal strength of character and determination with him. He was a practical rather than a theo-retical defender of the Constitution. He re-sisted all encroachments of the individual's rights and was the enemy of all jobs and schemes to involve the Government outside of its proper functions.

His first year as Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House was signalized by the saving of $30,000,000 to the Government.

by the saving of $30,000,000 to the Government. After many years' service in public life he was one of the poorest men in Congress, and enjoyed the distinction of being a man whose monesty and absolute integrity of purpose was never questioned. This, with his earnestness and forceful manners, impelled by an inflexible determination, gave his word tremendous weight and influence in Congress.

He was a man of the greatest simplicity in his mode of life, who clung to his home associations and cared nothing for display. The extent of his possessions is represented in the very plain home he owned on C street, near First, on Capitol Hill. It is an ordinary flat front house with two or three white marble steps at the front door, and with plain white copings. It is one of a row which would rent for perhaps $35 or $40. It is a neat, unpretentious home, such as might be that of a department clerk.

HIS PERSONAL CHARACTERISTICS. His appearance and his manners added to the force of his reputation. In the heat of debate his face was the ideal picture of power and determination. When set in purpose and fired by the energy of action, the muscles tightened in Wife" is in its second annual tour and the his heavy jaw, his eyes bright and his form erect and drawn up to its fullest proportions, he looked the personification of an irresistible force. He was never known to hesitate on the force. He was never known to hesitate on the floor of the House. At the time when the southern Democrats were powerless to help themselves or their party, he, as a Northern Union man, was of inestimable service in their defense. Long hours of the day and night spent on his feet in resistance of the force bill in the Forty-third Congress with bardly a cerporal's guard to support him gave a forcible flustration of his newering orgalities as a leader. guard to support him gave a foreible illustration of his powerful qualities as a leader.
In 1880 Mr. Randall's name first became prominently considered as a desirable Democratic candidate for the Presidency of the United States. He had been the four numediately preceding years close in the counsel of Samuel J. Tilden, and believing that the Sage of Greystone was unjustly deprived of the Presidency in 1877, he was an unwavering supporter of his claims to renomination. Occupying that attitude, he resolutely declined to have his own name canvassed, and, in the opinion of many of his friends, carried his loyalty to Mr.
Tilden to the verge of ruthless self-sacrifice.
In June 1880, he actually went to the National Democratic Convention to lead the advocates In June, 1880, he actually went to the National Democratic Convention to lead the advocates of "the old ticket." The convention met in Cincinnati. Mr. Randail's headquarters were at the St. Nicholas Hotel, There he was walted upon by scores of influential delegates and other party leaders, who begged that he would drop Tilden and enter the lists himself.

There was a similar use of Mr. Randall's name in the convention at Chicago in 1884. During the Garfield and Arthur administrations alike, while his party was in a minority in the Monse. the Senate and in the majority in the House, his hold on the Democratic party had been greatly strengthened. More than ever he came to be recognized as the natural leader of the Mr. Bandail to enter military service in the Light Horse of Philadelphia. He received promotion until he became cornet, a rank equal to that of captain. In 1863 he was among the troops advanced to Harrisburg, as the result of General Lee's invasion of Northern territory. During the battle of Gettrsburg his rank was that of Provost Marshal of Columbia.

He entered the Thirty-eighth Congress in December, 1863, and has kept his seat in the House of Representatives ever since. He has served in the Committees of Public Buildings and Grounds, Hanking and Currency, Retrenchment and Expenditure, in the State Department. He was a ready, concise speaker, without rheiorical affectations. He was elected Speaker in 1875 and held the position until the persisted in voting their first choice, and on the first ballot he received 170 votes, showing a strength second only to Cleveland's. Subsequently nearly every Randall man joined the Cleveland column, giving him the necessary two-thirds for the nomination. Nobody rejoiced more than Mr. Randall in a result which he did so much to bring about, and throughout the campaign he was one of Mr. Cleveland's most trusted advisers, and his influence in regard to appointments to important offices was paramount during the administration.

On the subject of the World's Fair he said: "Unless Congress and the State of Illinois come to the rescue there will be no fair in Chicago. That was a fair valuation of the entire properties, including every-thing. At Millvale they turned out 200 tons of finished products day, and at Clinton about 15,000 tons a year. Cured by Cuticura

About two years ago I was attacked with an inflammatory disease on my face (petyriasis), which was very troublesome, being extremely lithy and painful, giving rise to the production of small bran-like scales. My general health was affected by it. I used the CUTICURA RESOLVENT, CUTICURA, and CUTICURA SOAP according to directions, and experienced a change from the very first day; they worked wonderfully, and by their continued use for about five months I was completely cured. I have unbounded faith in the CUTICURA REMEDIES. I regard the CUTICURA RESOLVENT as the very best blood purifier; a trial will convince any one. The CUTICURA SOAP is the best in the market, and cheap at twice its present price. I shall use no other for the tollet and bath.
