searching eyes that his is the love of a lifetime, a love that can be tried and yet live, because it has grown and not sprung up to wither and die in an hour."

"Why, how romantic we are! Nevertheless right-I quite agree with you, dear. When you ask for the genuine article take care that you get it. It's half as nice again, aud goes ever so much further. You want to win a great battle, and, like a brave Gen eral who commands the puppets-I beg their pardon-I mean soldiers-wear the crown of victory. But the battle isn't quite ended yet. There are a few more fires to face, a few more marches to make, but it's nearly at an end, and then you can lay down the sword and like the gladiators of old cry 'Habet.' And then your army, 'the world, will praise you, and you'll live happy even after-as they do in the story books. What do you say to this summing up? Almost as good as the Judge's to-day, isn't it, Madge? Now I must be off. I've to go in somewhere else, and you have to dress for Mrs. May's ball. If you've nothing better to do to-morrow, call for me and we'll do some shopping together, and renew our conversation. I suppose I shall find Jack where we left him, so don't trouble to come down. I'll make my own adien. Good night, dear, remember all I've said. My pupil is quickly mastering the task I've set her-much quicker than I ever thought it was possible." Alice was gone. I heard her go down to Jack. I heard ber speaking to him at the door, bidding her good night. The door closed upon her and she was gone,

What a true friend, and what would my life have been without her advice? She alone had known and understood my nature. If she had not spoken as she did before I entered upon my new life, I might have acted so differently. Perhaps I should have resented Jack's marrying me for my money, and shown him by my treatment of him I did. I might have become soured and petulant, made myself more objectionable to him than ever. But no, I started upon my mission in a different spirit. By no sign, word, or action, did he suspect that I knew why he had asked me to be his wife. His wishes were mine, his ideas mine, his tastes mine, until at last we have become united by sympathics. I've made myself essential to him. When he's worried he flies to me for consolation, when troubled and uncertain of anything, for advice. And yet how different things might have been if Alice had not read Jack's character aright

The fire was burning so brightly in the grate that I got up and turned out the lights. meant to ensconce myself snugly in an armchair and enjoy a peaceful alumber be-fore dressing for the night's frivolity. Everything was at hand, and I had quite an hour before my maid would come to disturb me. But someone was coming to disturb me already, for there was a knock at the door. "Come in."

It was Jack.

"Are you going to be alone, Madge? I knew Alice was gone, but I didn't know whether anyone intended calling in on the way to the dance?"

"Not that I am aware of, Jack. You're going with me, are you not? But perhaps you're too tired." "Not a bit of it. Of course I'm going with you. A young married woman may be all very well under an old married woman's sas City at the pens of the owner, and until wing, but I don't believe in it. Her husband's the proper person to chaperon her. But I've got a lot of things to say to you, Madge. First of all, what have you to say to me about to-day's proceedings? You haven't congratulated me yet."

"Why, Jack, you've received enough congratulations and adulation to fill a vol-ume. You'll have your head quite turned. You know how proud I was of you. Didn't my face act as a mirror to my thoughts?" "Does your face always act as a mirror to your thoughts, always, darling?" "Darling!" He had never called me by such an endearing name before. My face did act as a mirror to my thoughts then, for I felt myself turning deadly pale, and then the blood sushed back again till it almost seemed to be bursting forth from every feature of my face. I could not answer him, my heart was too full.

Law's Clutches. MANY SPEAKERS, BUT FEW LISTENERS NEILLSVILLE, WIS., Apr:l 25 .- A telegram has been received from Sheriff Page, of this (Clark) county, stating that he had captured Sam Allen at Whatcom, Wash. and will bring him back.

Allen's crime was committed in the town of Loyal, this county, on the 10th of May, 1886. Allen, who was a well-to-do farmer, with a much esteemed wi'e and family, be came enamored of Mrs. Wright, a neighbor plaint that he had but few hearers. He said ing farmer's wife. that if the people could only look in and

Mrs. Wright's husband died very sud denly, and a post mortem examination dis-closed the fact that he had been poisoned. Mrs. Wright then made a confession that Allen had fed arsenic to Wright in small doses until the latter died. She said that Allen had promised to marry her as soon as he could make way with his wife and Mrs. Wright could kill her husband. Mrs.

by a motion for a new trial. It was over-ruled, and Allen was in jail awaiting sen-tence when he escaped. On the morning of May 26, 1887, when Sheriff Dwiner went to the jail he discovered that Allen had es caped. Two fire escape doors leading from the prisoner's cell to the street had been mysteriously unlocked during the night, and Allen, finding his way clear, walked out. It afterward developed that Mrs. Wright stole the keys to the doors, slid i down a water spout from her room on the second floor to where Allen could reach it and thus enabled him to reach the woods. He struck across country, finally going to Washington.

Allen made a desperate effort to throw the officers off his track by causing a letter to be mailed at Sydney, Australia, saving that one Sam Allen, a Neillsville, Wis., murderer, had died at a little town in the in terior, after confessing his crime. The stor was investigated by State Department of-ficials and found to be false. Mrs. Wright, who confessed that she conspired with Allen to murder her husband, is living in Michigan. The case against her was dropped.

"My head and nose were constantly stopped up. My eyes were weak and watery. There were roaring and buzzing noises in my ears. I had a dull, heavy pain in my forehead. I could feel the mucus dropping back into my throat. I was constantly hawking and raising. "I used various remedies and was under the care of different physicians, but could obtain no relief. I grew worse rapidly. The pain in my head became very severe. For six months I was not without a headache for a single day. I be-came quite deaf. My appetite failed me. It was a rare thing for me to eat more than one meal in 24 hours, and half she time I was unable to re-tain that. My heart would beat rapidly. The palpitation would be followed by a slow, irreg-ular beating and a feeling of faintness. Sharp pains would shoot through my chest, extending a for a the shout there. Mr. Blair-Is the Senator ashamed to pains would shoot through my chest, extending as far as the shoulder blades.

Mr. George proceeded with his argument in favor of the amendment. He wanted the Senate to understand, and if not, he wanted American people to understand, that the question before the Senate was whether the settlers on those lands in Florida were to be allowed a chance to show that they had a right to them, and that the railroad company or its assigns had no such right. Mr. Pasco took the floor, and the bill went over made a personal investigation of the case to hear at least those who had done so. The amendment did not propose to take away any man's property or to destroy any right, but to do a thing which was essential for a decision of the rights of the parties-that was, to give them a standing in court by which they could assert their rights. Madge, this has been an eventful day for me. I've assured myself a position in the world. I'm doubly proud of having done so, because I have you to share that position with me, but I have much more to accomplish before my goal is reached. Many more briefs to get, speeches to make, and cases to win. I've another brief on hand to-night, another speech to make, another case to win, of more importance to me than life itself. Shall I win it as easily as I did the one to-day? I'm going to try. This is my own case, and you are the judge. Madge, I'm going to relate a little anecdote. Be ore we were marriedduring our engagement-I happened to be spending a day up the river, between Windsor and Ouseley. I was alone in a punt, and steering myself up the back water. On and steering myself up the back water. On my travels I came across a cance. It was moored into a bed of willows. In this cance were two young people, oblivious of every-thing and everybody, for they were in love. At least, the young tellow was, but the girl At least, the young lenow was, out the girl could not understand why he did love her. For when he said, 'Dolly, I love you; haven't I told you so thousands of times?' her only answer was, 'Yes, but why?' His question and her answer rang in my His question and her answer rang in my ears the whole of that day and often since. Then, Madge, I didn't understand how much Dolly's answer meant to that poor boy, for I didn't know what love was, and I didn't want to know. But that's six months ago, and time works wonders. A good many things can happen in six months. I've mad a confession to you in relating this little river adventure. Can you guess what it is?"

"Yes, Jack, that when you proposed to me you didn't care for me. When you mar-ried me you didn't care for me. You---" "Stop, Madge, the truth is often unpala-table. What you have guessed is, I'm ashamed to confess, only too true. I was poor, ambitious. You were rich, pretty, and a 'good catch.' I was advised to marry you, and accordingly set about doing so. I asked you to marry me. You said 'Yes. Whether I loved you or you loved me I didn't give a thought, and therefore didn't ask you that question. I doubt if I ever did give such a commodity as love even a passing thought then, but I give it many passing thought then, but I give it many passing thoughts now. We are husband and wife, and expected and believed to care for one another. Madge, I'm going to repeat the question that young fellow has repeated so many times to his sweetheart in that canoe on the river, though mine differs in many points to his. I can only say "Madge, you know I love you." I can't say 'haven't I told you so thousands of times?" because I haven't, but I want you to make me the same haven's, but I want you to make me the same answer as Dolly did, will you?" "Yes, but why?" "Why, Madge? because you have been the one to open my eyes to love and to life, have founded for me a new existence, and taught me what real happiness is. Why? because you are my sunshine, and without you everything would wither away. You are as essential to me as the sun's rays are are as essential to me as the sun's rays are to the flowers. Madge, my wife, you don't doubt me, do you? I have never deceived you. You know my love is yours now. You have been the one to discover the hidden treasure, for that it may prove a treasure to you I pray night and day. This is my case -my pleading? Say you believe me and tell me that you want this love." "Want this love! How much I have wanted it you can never guess. I knew the bitter truth even at the altar rails, and longed to draw back, though my love for you willed me forward. Words of comfort and assurance seemed to ring in my ears. "He is yours to-day before all the world. You will be his one day before all the world' and it is true at last."

"My sweetheart and wife! How bright the future is for me now. The whole world before us, we should be happy, and we will. To-night we go out into the world to be feted and made much of, and after all how empty and shallow it is. But I've one anchor to rest upon-your love. Our courtship was a short one, but our honeymoon is to last forever.

"How radiant we shall both look tonight, and how everyone will envy me my

From Taxation. CHICAGO, April 25 .- The discussion of a petition addressed to Hon. Carroll D. Wright, United States Commissioner of Labor, occupied the Chicago Single Tax Club last night. The petition, which was unanimously adopted, asked that an investigation be made with reference to a change in the system of taxation which would exempt all products of labor from all direct and indirect taxes, substituting therefor a single tax on the value of land exclusive of improvements, this inquiry to be made with a view of establishing the probable effects of such a change, having especial regard for the ef-fects in opening up natural opportunities for labor and capital, on wages and busi-ness prosperity, on the distribution of wealth, etc.

This Year.

Mr. J. M. O'Neill advance agent of Forepaugh's Circus, yesterday leased the Exposition Park for May 19 and 20. The ground which has heretofore been used by circuses, had been somewhat curtailed by fencing off the Brotherhood ball ground, and therefore Mr. O'Neill had to make arrangements to have the fence removed when the circus comes. This privilege was secured by paying a bonus of $300 to the ball club, making the rental for ground for the two days $1,000.
