OFFICE OF PITTSBURG DISPATCE, TUESDAY, May 27, 1890. The prospect for small fruits was never better in this section than row. Strawber-ries, huckleberries and blackberries promise an unusually large yield in the territory tributary to Pittsburg. As to large fruits prospects are not so good. Peaches are almost an entire failure, and apples do not promise well at this date. The same is true of cherries and pears. But our country is It, and there is little doubt that the fruit sup oly will be ample for all needs the coming sec-on. Strawberries are already coming to market in quantities too large for our ability to handle. Our firm received 180 our annity to handle. Our firm received 180 crates this morning, and all our neighbors were liberally supplied, so that berries were a drug, and prospects are that they will be a greater drug before the week is out." Interviews with other commission men de-veloped similar views as to small fruit pros-pects.

As to large fruits there is a general agree in the section. Said an old-time dealer: "There will be scarcely any peaches in the territory for 100 miles around Pittsburg. The opening was weaker and prices about 1c lower, influenced possibly by the weather, though the feeling was nervous, and on symptoms of a declining market operators turned sellers.

It was learned yesterday that Messrs, Black & Baird had just closed a $60,000 sale on lower Penn avenue, presumably in the vicinity of Sixth street, to Henry Phipps, Jr., but as the deeds had not passed they refused to give particulars. The price is a considerable increase over previously reported deeds on that portion of the avenue in question.

The trouble was that people would not live within their means. that people would not live within their means. They squandered on luxuries what would give them a good start. This was especially true of newly-married people. Instead of beginning at the bottom of the ladder, as their parents did, and elimbing up, they began at the top and generally, in the the course of a few years, found themselves burdened with debt and with expensive habits which made saving next to impossible. He was of the opinion that the concentration of capital was a good thing for the country. It had been the means of carrying out many great enterprises and of giving employment at good wages to the laboring element, which otherwise would have been impossible. In his boyhood, he remarked, capital was much more diffused than now or rather it was much less concentrated, and the result was there were few important improvements. The Post says: The decline in prices was induced by the professional element, induced by the lower London prices and the fact that the remainder of the week will be broken by a full holiday on Friday and half holiday on Saturday. The favorable nature of the news from the West recarding the formation of a new asso-ciation and agreement to restore rates was without effect on the Granger stocks, which in the late trade was caused by hammering by traders, together with realization of profits on the earlier advance.
