"Special train, did you say?" asked the President. "Yes, sir. We have arranged with Mr.

Pitcairn to have a special train placed at your disposal. We can then have an inormal reception at the Monongahela House and a brief talk at Mechanical Hall, where will be a very large number of distinguished and representative men from all over the country, who are counting much on hearing you," replied Colonel Echols. "Oh, no," broke in the President, "I don't believe I can undertake it. I am sure I will not attend any meeting, nor will I ride home on a special train. I won't have time. I must be home by 9 o'clock Saturday night, so I don't think it is worth while to discuss the matter further."
