demonstrations was a thaumatrope in which photographs of the various phases passed [PREPARED FOR THE DISPATCH.] through by a drop of water from its forma-tion and breaking away from its support to its falling and being absorbed into the water below, were rotated and observed in a The problem of protecting piling and timber in submarine structures against the ravages of the teredo and other marine inmirror through the rapidly passing orifices in the thaumatrope disc. The effect of form-ing and falling liquid drops was exactly re-produced and demonstrated the extreme so-curacy with which the series of instantansects has long been a vexed one. There are 24 species of the teredo, but the ship worm is the best known. The teredo navalis has a long and flexible body terminating in cutting shells or bits, and is inclosed for the eous photographs was produced. By this process the whole history of a liquid drop can be studied in the most remarkable mansake of its protection in a bose-like shell, which reaches from the exterior extremity can be studied in the most remarkable manner; there is first the gathering of the drop,
which gradually lengthens, then a slight constriction is formed which diminishes to a mere thread of liquid; the next puncture shows the thread broken and the drop detached, followed by the retraction of the supporting drop, which throws off a minute spherule which is the remains of the broken thread.
The drop falls, and during its descent is to within a short distance of what is known as the head. The teredo swims about for awhile in search of timber, which it enters by a very minute opening. The worm grows at the rate of two inches a month, and digs a hole to accommodate its increasing size. It continues its progress for 12 or 18 months, propagates and dies. It reaches a length of 10 inches, although one has been seen 18% The drop falls, and during its descent is thrown into pulsating vibration varying from a vertical to a horizontal ellipsoid passing through a superoidal stage, and the pendent drop simultaneously vibrates as if it were a weighted spring. A further and perhaps unexpected result follows the falling into the water of the detached drop, for inches in length. The teredo cannot exist in muddy waters, as piling from the Mississippi Sound has been examined after the annual floods, when the river water is very muddy, and the dead bodie of the worm have been found in these piles. Again, it it rebounds and vibrates in a similar manner to the pendent drop at the top. These phenomena are all reproduced in a most re-alistic manner when the photograph so pro-duced are examined with the aid of the is proven that they can exist for a short time in fresh water, as at Brisbane, Australia, they survive the annually recurring ex-posure to fresh water from the floods, lasting from two to three months.

The plans adopted for protecting piles thaumatrope. against these pests are numerous, the best known and most efficient being to creosote Ecvelope Moistoner and Senier. A device of great value hails from Kenthem, which is done by subjecting the pile, after being peeled, to steaming ten hours in tucky. This is neither more nor less than a a vacuum and 12 hours in a retort, in which the creesote is forced into the wood, taking couple of standards, fitted on a suitable base, with rollers and moistened sponge. the place of the sap, which has been with-drawn entirely from the wood. From 10 to 12 pounds of creesote to the cubic loot of envelopes. The gummed surface on the envelopes. The gummed surface on the envelope flop is first moistened by passing it between a guide and the sponge holder, wood is about the right charge. The only objection to this process is its first cost. It will not pay to crossote piles on this coast, owing to the low price of same compared drawing it forward over the roller beneath when the flap is turned down and the enwith creosote. A creosoted pile, say 40 feet in length, is worth on the Pacific coast velope is passed between the rollers and effectually sealed. The machine is said to about $20. Covering piles with copper has been tried, and with great success, but as it pay for itself in a short time in its saving of time and labor. costs about the same as creosote, it is objec-tionable on that account. labor is necessary to put it on, the objection is the same.
One of the plans divised consists in One of the plans divised consists in slabbing the pile and tacking on tarred paper on the core, then covering the tarred paper with the slabs well spiked on. A recent inquiry made concerning the old Dutch plan of closely driving long nails into the timber below water line, has resulted in the rejection of that method. Wrapping the piles with tarred canvas or tarred paper and slabbing is generally recognized as cheap and practicable. Sections of piles thus treated, which have been under water for seven or eight years at San Francisco have been found to be almost en-tirely proof against the teredo.

The electrical connection may be so arranged that the act of striking the vessel attacked would explode the charge. The pilot and his associate, having remained on board until the last possible moment, would jump overboard, and, being provided with life preservers, could be picked up by the launch. The inventor claims that a very heavy charge of explo-sives could be carried in this way, and that the explosion, while it would of course, destroy the vessel itself, weuld also destroy the largest iron-clad affoat. The risk is great, but he believes it would be possible for all the crew to escape,

About Big Guns.

Lord George Hamilton, the First Lord of the English Admiralty, spoke recently very strongly in favor of heavy guns, against which much unfavorable comment has been launched of late. He said: "The one object of all naval, and of all military tacticians is to concentrate force on a given space, and within a given area; and they do so because they believe that not merely the material destruction which the concentration of fire effects, but the moral effect of the damage which it does is of enormous importance." Lord Hamilton considered that ill the objections against loading and training guns by mechanical power are a near reproduction of the objections which were urged against the introduction of steam for sail power. Mechanical power may oc-cusionally break down, but the speaker believed there was no machinery on board a man-of-war so unlikely to break down as the hydraulic power by which the great guns are loaded and trained. But it mechanical power be substituted for manual power in loading, the men must stand level with their guns, and protection must be af-forded them, otherwise they can be swept away by the smallest gun. This means add-ing extra weight and offering a much larger target to the projectile of the enemy.

Underclothing.

The important matter of underclothing has been treely discussed of late. A correspondent writing on the subject, says: "All the talk about 'natural clothing' I regard as mere twaddie. Man neither eats, clothes por exists 'naturally.' I am a vegetarian; but I smile at some of my vegetarian friends when they talk about 'natural' food; and I am amused at the people who try to find pre-pedents for man's guidance in the coats of animals. Man is an animal, who, after thousands of years spent in arriving at his present state of development, feeds and lothes himself, more or less wisely, in acordance with his acquired tastes and experiences, and he will continue to do so without egard to the woolly sheep or the hairy horse. Cotton, as ordinarily used, is, I grant, a hilly-feeling material next the skin, under pertain conditions of temperature. Made up as cellular cloth it is not. It is then warmer in cold weather and cooler in warm veather than the Jaeger fabrics or flannel. I didn't believe it till I tried it. Now I can be put. The prudent housewife packs away her winter clothing in old newspapers knowing that the printer's ink drives away the moth as effectually as camphor or tar paper, and uses newspapers under the car-pet, laid over the regular carpet paper for the same reason. Ice, enveloped in news-papers, so that the air is excluded, will keep longer than in any other way, and a pitcher of ice water laid in a newspaper with the ends of the paper twisted together so as to keep out the air will keep cool all night in the height of summer.

A popular scientific journal calls attenion to the many uses to which old paper

tle Creek Valley. Home seekers, enterprising business men and shrewd investors all regard Wilmerding as the most promining town in Western Punnsylvania. WHY?

BECAUSE the location at that point of the immense plant of the WESTINGHOUSE AIR-BRAKE COMPANY, employing about 2,000 men, most of whom are skilled mechanics earning high wages, insures a large and prosperous remulation. population.

BECAUSE, having no company stores, it affords abundant opportunity for independent business enterprise.
