tion of 350,000 for one day, anyway

When Supervising Architect Windrim left the new Government building last evening he gave this parting injunction to Arch-itect Malone: "I think you had better clean up around this building, and make it look as if somebody owned it."

Mr. Windrim was not very well pleased with the disordered condition of things, and he called up all the contractors and told them what he wanted them to do. He also instructed Mr. Malone to hold the contractors to their word, and to push the work just as fast as he could. "For some time," he said, "I have instructed Mr. Malone to exercise his judgment and to do whatever he thought would excedite the work. If he was in doubt about anything I told him to telegraph me at once. I think we can have the first floor ready for the postoffice by October 1. The root will be finished in three weeks, and the contract for plastering will be let on Monday. The papers for the plumbing and electric lights will be prepared next week."

Mr. Windrim went over the old postoffice building with Postmaster McKean. When he saw the musty United States Court room he threw up both bands, and said things were a good deal worse than he imagined. He said it was a shame that so much time had been lost on the new building, and he proposes to make his people work, or, he added significantly, "somebody will have to re."
