Romantic Story of a Half Million Acres of Land Granted to James Swann a Century Ago

NOW TO BE SOLD ON COURT ORDER.

Virginia's Liberality to a Brave Son, Who Gave His Entire Fortune to the Cause of the Colonies.

A MAMMOTH COLONIZATION PROJECT

Swallowed Up in the Mad Whirl of the Glitteri Paris of Kapoleon's Day.

SEPRCIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH. PARKERSBUG, W. Va., July 12 .- A decree has just been entered in the United States Court in this city by Judge John J. Jackson in the case of Dumas versus D'Huc d' Monsignon et al, Locontre versus Randall et al and Randall versus Dressler et al, authorizing John R. Reed, of Philadelphia Pa., trustee, to sell all the interests, legal and equitable, in 500,000 acres of land, part of a large territory granted by the Commonwealth of Virginia to James Swann June 3, 1795. This decision is the finale of a most interesting and romantic story, which the correspondent secured through the transistion of the old French manuscripts now in the hands of the Court.

Prior to the Revolutionary War there resided in the city of Boston a prominent citigen and merchant - Mr. James Swann When the war for the independence of the colonies commenced, Mr. Swann adopted the cause of his country and was one of the first to enroll his name in the patriot army. By Gen. Washington and Gen. Lafayette he was looked upon as one of their most confi dential and important aides. Swann was very courageous, discreet and a man of ex-cellent judgment as a soldier, and through these talents won promotion rapidly, and at the end of the war he had become a major-

GAVE HIS FORTUNE TO HIS COUNTRY His sympathy for his country in her financial embarrassment after the close of that long and bloody war was so great that he gave for her relief almost his entire private fortune. General Swann was one of the heroes whom the old Commonwealth of Virginia looked when a great leading to the state of the st ginia looked upon as a special protege. When Virginia's adopted son was learned to bear financial straits the House of Burgesses granted him a vast landed estate which amounted to something over 2,500,-000 acres of land. This land comprised part of Kentucky, eight or ten counties in Virginia and almost all of what is now known as Southwestern West Virginia in the counties of Boone, Logan, Lincoln, Wyoming, McDowell, Mercer and others along the General Swann was a man of romantic and very imaginative character. When the old State gave him the great territory he became enthused with the idea of a grand colonization scheme. He had many close friends among the nobles and leading men of France, and he believed that with their aid, which he did not question, he could secure an immense colony—a Western Utopia—on the lands granted him by Virginia. He was so enthused with this scheme that he arranged his affairs and in a few days departed for France.

GAY PARIS TURNED HIS HEAD. When General Swann arrived in Paris he was warmly and enthusiastically welcomed by his former comrades of the French allied arm. Through their influence he gained entrance into royal society, and quickly entered into the whirl and dissipation of the French court. Gay Paris, with its intrigues, frivolities, extravagances, and fast life, drew from all quarters of Europe kings, princes, potentates and other nobility. The grand colonization scheme of General Swann, presented in the flowery language and beautiful coloring given it by the European enthusiast, suited the excitable and romantic temperament of his listen-ers, and they enlisted their names and fortunes. Among those who took part were several kings of the lilliputian monarchies, half a dozen or more princes, dukes and lesser nobility galore.

Unfortunately for General Swann this occurred at a time when the history of France had become identified with the fortunes of Napoleon I. Bouaparte had but just returned from the East, where he had destroyed or overthrown the vacillating, dictatorial Government with the two councils and formed a new Constitution. He had been chosen First Consult and been chosen First Consul; had broken the coalition formed against France by the bloody victory of Marengo; had forced Austria and Germany to conclude the peace of Luneville, and Great Britain that of Amiens, and by concordat re-established Christian worship.

BANKRUPT AT LAST.

After months, in which the days and nights had been spent in folly and dissipa-tion, General Swann one morning found himself bankrupt, with a debt of 4,000,000 fraces to liquidate. Paris had been thrown into confusion by the unmeasurable ambition of the First Consul. Money became scarce and could not be had, as the moneyed men and financiers foresaw the terrible time coming. The colonization scheme could no longer be thought of, and General Bwann's creditors became importunate and demanded mertgages on his American property in liquidation of his debts. He refused to mortgage his Utopis, and was arrested and thrown into prison (St. Pelaco).

Under the old law then in force in France his creditors were compelled, not only to support him, but to do so in the manner in support him, but to do so in the manner in which he had lived while at liberty. His apartments in St. Pelago were luxurious in all their appointments, and his cuisine was such as he could only have gotten in the most luxurious salons of Paris. He had his wines from the South of France and his pate de fois gras. He was daily visited by his morgantic wife, who came at 8 every morning and remained until 7 in the even-ing. In brief, he lived like a prince in all but liberty for ten years. He was released during the historical "Three Days," when the prison doors were opened.

DIED OF A BROKEN HEART. When General Swann walked out of St. Pelago he looked about him and inquired for some of his old friends, but found not one. Every one of them had been killed or banished, and not one remained to sympa-thize with or assist him. He wandered about the streets for three days, and on the evening of the third day he fell dead of a

When General Swann's death became known in Virginia the Legislature appointed Mons. John Peter Dumas, of Philadelphia, Pa., trustee for the French heirs. Mons. Dumas died in 1838, and left the estate in debt $800,000. While Mons. Dumas was living the French heirs employed Hon.

Josiah Randall, father of the late Samuel Randall, as their attorney. Meanwhile, the estate had become forfeited to the State of virginia for non-payment of taxes, but in 1838 the old Commonwealth, still remembering the courage and generosity of her adopted son, reconveyed it. The French, learning of this fact, petitioned the appointment of Mr. Josiah Randall as trustee, and he was appointed in 1855. Mr. Randall died ten years later, or about the close of the late war.

LITIGATION AND BLOODSHED. While he lived the great estate was continuously engaged in suits of ejectment against the army of squatters which had settled upon the land. The work of ejectment was a dangerous one; so much so that quite a number of the officers who were sent out were ambuscaded, shot and murders. When the Civil War began little or nothing could be done, as most of the property was either inside the Confederate lines or on either inside the Confederate lines or on disputed ground.

In the year 1866 Robert E. Randall, brother of the late Hon. Samuel J. Randall, was appointed trustee by the United States Court. Mr. Randall borrowed money to disencumber the estate, but as he was himself an invalid he succeeded in doing very little. The amounts due the French creditors who were represented by Hon. R. G. Barr, of Wheeling, W. Va., is said to have been about $1,500,000. Other suits, ranging from $30,000 upward, were also brought against the estate several years ago.

A NEW YORK SYNDICATE TO PURCHASE. In 1886 Mr. Robert Randall was removed and Mr. E. L. Butterick, of Charleston, W. Va., appointed as agent in West Virginia to ascertain the condition of the lands and to ascertain and report what amount of the territory was covered by squatters claims, and what amount was for claims, and what amount was forfeited for nonpayment of taxes and what lands were free from embarrassment.

The trustee was given authority to take any steps necessary to reclaim lands of the estate in West Virginia forfeited by reason of non-payment of taxes or occupied by squatters, and also to borrow sufficient money to discharge liens and taxes, with a

KIPLING'S METEORIC CAREER. From a Soldler on India's Coral Strands to papers in India giving his impressions of our country. If these letters are ever republished in book form, or any other form which will give the great American public a chance to get at them, Rudyard Kipling's name is Dennis so far as personal popularity in the United States goes. He blazed away at us with a ferocity that throws far into the shade Mrs. Trollope, Dickens and Max

O'Rell combined.

After stopping four months in the United States, during which time he experienced a variety of sensations, from a prayer meeting at Chautauqua to an interview with Mark Twain, Rudyard Kipling came to London. He was comparatively unknown, though a few of his writings in India had been republished on this side of the water and had attracted attention. To-day his books are piled deep on all the railway news stands and conspicuously exhibited in shop windows, Rudyard Kipling has leaped at a bound to the very top of the literary ladder. For a time he threatened to eclipse even the ubiquitous Stanley as the lion of the London sesson.

I asked Kipling about America. Here is what he said. "Well, I like the people im-mensely, but in my letters to the Pioneer, in India, I hurled twelve-barrelled curses at the country. I don't think the Americans ever fully realize the discomforts that a civilized traveler who visits them for the first time is obliged to submit to. I want first time is obliged to submit to. I want to go back to America this year if I can. Met some wonderfully nice people there. The Americans are nearer to my life than the English. They resemble our Anglo-Indians in square dealing and frankness of speech. When they have anything to say they say it. I roamed about with the common people and studied all phases of American life, I went to ward meetings and caucuses, attended political conventions, went cuses, attended political conventions, went to camp meetings, and attended classical lectures at Chautauqua. I have written columns about what I saw, which the Indian papers printed. I am a newspaper man, so I wrote what I had to tell to the news-

The Only Authorized Portrait Napoleon by Robert Lefevre GRACES AN AMERICAN GALLERY.

Clever Manipulations of a Minneapolis Timber King to Get It.

MYSTERIOUS WOMAN IN THE CASE

Napoleon I, has ever been an interestin character to Americans, writes Harold Withrae to THE DISPATCH. No less inter esting was he, per force, to Englishmen, and who can comprehend the here worship which lives for him in France. In spite of this, an American enthusiast has carried off what is conceded to be one of the greatest of the Napoleonic treasures. In 1810, shortly after Napoleon formed the conjugal alliance with Austria by his marriage with Marie Louise, and while the spirit of fresh adventure tinged his acts, he personally commissioned Robert Lefevre, who was then the favorite painter of the French nobility, to execute what he charged the artist should be his masterpiece in portraiture. Notwithstanding Bonaparte's traiture. Notwithstanding Bonaparte's aversion to sitting for portraits, he agreed that it should be from life and gave his promise that he would pose attentively before the canvas.

In the month of March, 1811, it was finished and pronounced by the most critical judges "a grand respiring counterpart" of the Emperor. It is said that Napoleon was so attached to the portrait that he carried it into exile to Elba, and then to Bt. Helena, where, in the decay of his powers, it served as a realistic iens to his retrospective meditation. In 1821, at Napoleon's death, by decree of the exile's will, the famous portrait of 1810 became the most prized treasure of the curios and fixtures of the house of the Duc de Choiseul.

When the Duc died in Paris in 1838, his heir, the Duc de Grevise and uncle of the Comte la Grange, became vested with an tes have become almost mere tradi-

Comte la Grange, became vested with an estate in the portrait. When this due died the portrait succeeded to his nephew, Vi-comte G. de Beaupleay, who now resides in Paris, and from whose estate the portrait became an American property.

IN A TIMBER KING'S COLLECTION. It is now the property of T. B. Walker, of Minneapolis, Minn. Mr. Walker is the timber king of the Northwestern States. With $500,000 or more invested in a private collection of acknowledged masterpieces of the last three centuries, the liberal quality of his patronage keeps him in constant search for the best examples of old and modern masters. Being an admirer of Napoleon I., Mr. Walker went to Paris in 1889, resolved to Walker went to Paris in 1889, resolved to negotiate for the famous portrait of 1810, which then hung in the Chateau de Nantalais a Neudon—the estate of the Visomte de Besupleay. The American commissioner, Mr. Cramm, who was then in Paris, was the friend of the Viscomte. By a clever compact between Mr. Walker and the American commissioner, the latter was commissioned to secure the portrait, even at the cost of positive measures and indefinite means.

The Viscomte was intractable, and avowed his determination to live with that famous physiognomy until he passed beyond the material pleasures of this world. "Why," said the Viscomte, "should I part with the heirloom of my ancestors, with all its glorious associations and attachments?"

associations and attachments?"
The commissioner pleaded: "But my dear Viscomte, we have among us an American who may be induced to pay an unreasonsole sum for what you can well spare in these, the latter days of your life. Besides, I think I can assure you that the portrait will not leave France until the Exposition is dissolved."
The last stipulation must have commended itself to the Viscomte's consideration, for the French Minister of War had the Visthe French Minister of War had the Vis-comte's promise that the picture should re-main in the Exposition. The commissioner urged the Viscomte to set some price, some quotation to which he would attach his honor and performance. The Viscomte was firm in the belief that his only security lay papers. They were my first impressions of the country, hurriedly written, of course, but I mean to publish them in book form in the value he placed upon his chattels. A PRICE HE THOUGHT HIGH ENOUGH.

"One hundred thousand francs! No, "One hundred thousand francs! No, hold; the sum must not be round. I will not do even that. Hundred and ten; there!" said his nobility, as he turned away, "that will soothe your importunate American!" He feit certain the timber king would not squander $21,000 for Napoleon's portrait, even though it were worth double that sum as an addition to art in American Patran. as an addition to art in America. Retrac-ing his steps the Viscomte qualified his offer by stating that the picture must not leave the exposition without the consent of the War Department, and this he said, he knew the commissioners could not invoke the commissioners could not invoke.

With characteristic candor, Mr. Walker procured current exchange for 110,000 france, dispatched a messenger to the American Consul, and with him held a short consultation, while the commissioner played upon the heads of the War Department. For no consideration would the department consent consideration would the department consent to the removal of the picture. A charming lady now became a party to the combination. Through her efforts the War Department allowed the portrait to be taken away. In the meantime the commissioner sought the Viscomte at his chateau and, tendering him the currency, 110,000 france, completely dumfounded the Lord of Natialials. The lady meanwhile learned that the Legova por-

Is health. The secret of beauty is the power to digest and assimilate a proper quantity of food. This can never be done when the liver does not act its part. It is the great driving wheel in the mechanism of man, and when it is out of order the whole system becomes deranged and fever, dyspepsia, suck headache, constipation, jaundica, bilious colic, kidney disease and general debility ensue. To restore the normal functions of the liver and impart that beauty which always attends a healthy constitution, Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills are recommended. They are designed solely for the disordered liver and the diseases which it produces. They are not a cure all, but in the cases mentioned they rarely ever fail to effect a cure.
