The streets during the greater part of the year are constantly torn up for pipe laying or for some other reason, so driving, instead of being a pleasure, be-comes an exasperation. All this is averted at Wilmerding by the East Pittsburg Im-provement Company setting the example of building a town ready to hand. It is combuilding a town ready to hand. owth of decades. This pioneer town of the Turtle Creek Valley is 13 miles from Union station, and from its location is destined soon to be the center of a vast pop-ulation. A short distance east is Walls station, where the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will locate its shops, roundhouse, etc., make up its trains, and by its connection via the Pittsburg, Virginia and Charles-ton and Pittsburg, Cincinnati and St. Louis Railway, with the Ohio river connecting railway bridge, will move the vast bulk of its freight around Pittsburg, thus concentrating at Wilmerding and Walls a business to appreciate which to the full requires a vast stretch of imagination, and this will all be accomplished within a few months. In addition this is the Turtle Creek Valley Railway, running through Wilmerding to Brinton, and which will eventually be extended to Murraysville, into the heart of the gas field, seven miles distant, while the Standard Underground Cable Company's works at Brin ton will furnish employment to an army of men whose families will live in Turtle Creek Valley or on the charming heights border-

NEED AN ELECTRIC ROAD.

Braddock, Wilmerding and Walls will be connected before the close of this year by an electric street railway, the need of which is already imperatively felt, notwithstanding the frequency with which trains run on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

But a sketch of Wilmerding would be incomplete without a passing reference to the nucleus of oue of the most complete and vast enterprises of modern times. Within a few feet of the Pennsylvania Railroad, on the left hand as you go east, are clustered the extensive buildings of the Westing-house Airbrake Company. To de-scribe them succinctly would require columns. The foundry building is 225x400 feet. In the casting department, where air-brake cylinders are made, the cupola, contrary to ordinary usage, is in the center, and the flasks travel around it by an endless chain arrangement. Sand is also brought to the molders by a similar device, running overhead and operated by a 27-horsepower engine. The molding machines are operated by hydraulic power. The blacksmith shop is 252x400 teet in ares. In it also the brass casting is done. In the boiler house are ten immense Babcock & Wilcox boilers, and there is a great fan, which is almost a cyclone in its way, which forces warm or cold air to the various departments of the works, as may be desired. In cold weather the surplus heat of the boiler room is carried to where it is more appreciated than it is there. The lighting of the works is very complete, many are and thousands of incandescent lamps being served by 2,000 volt power, with room for indefinite enlargement, as oc casion may require. The carpenter and fitting shop is very complete in its appointments, and the machine shop is 300x500 feet in dimensions, with four acres of floor space. It has a high story in the center, with glass root, which makes the two stories on the side as light as though out of doors. Instead of one great monster engine, with flywheels that wreck a town in case of a rupture, steam is conducted to the various departments and supplied to small engines, which are scattered through the works where needed. In this monster machine shop there are 800 lathes and miles of leather belting. A study of it brought to mind the observation of the imported hod carrier, that he had nothing to do but carry bricks and mortar to the top of a building and men up there did the work. This is almost literally true in the machine shop. The men simply direct operations, and as Mr. Gompers remarks, machines are made make machines. It is a grest triumph of mind over matter.

ALL IN GOOD SHAPE.

There are 4,000 feet of main shafting, run by four 80-horse power engines. The washrooms, water closets and sanitary arrangement of the works are very complete. Getting into the open air again, the interested visitor found that he had missed his train and had an hour-and-seven-minute
