Betails of Erection and Floating of the Great Channel Span.

THE INTENSE INTEREST IN THE WORK

Engineering Feat.

To judge from the expectations of excursion promoters, one-half the population of the city is expected to visit the Ohio connecting bridge this afternoon, and witness one of the most povel and interesting engineering feats of modern times. This will consist in placing in position the northeast channel main span. The construction of this connecting span was completed in the incredibly short period of 15 working days; the first pieces of work being placed in position on the 8th of July, and the last rivet driven home on the 26th of the same month-s few wet days interfering with the progress. Previously, on a series of piles rising about 15 feet out of water, and extending along, and at a distance of about 30 yards from the northeast side of Brunot's Island, a substantial framing of false work had been erected. This false work is about 540 feet long, 54 feet high, drawing in from a width of 90 feet at the base to about 30 feet at the top. It consists of trestles, each having five posts, strongly bolted to cross-beams and skillfully and securely wrought into one piece of compact framing by means of longitudinal and diagonal struts of both wood and iron.

GREAT CARE TAKEN.

Particular pains were paid to having the piling as level as possible, and for a pur-pose afterward to be described, rows of 20inch I-beams were used as a ground work on which the false work was built. In driving the piling and preparing for the erection of this talse work, provision was made for the subsequent placing in position of barges on which the bridge was to be floated barges on which the bridge was to be floated to its permanent location. For some days past preparations have been under way for the final and important step. Nine ordinary coal barges had been ordered from Messrs. Collins & Darrah, of Nebraska, and these were floated down and held in readiness. They had not been specially constructed, but with the view of minimizing all chances of accident, the en-gineers thought it best to have new boats. $20,000. Their dimensions are 130 feet long, 25 feet wide and 8 feet deep. In addition to the ordinary bulkheads, fore and aft, three more were constructed to obviate either end of the barge becoming depressed through a rush of water to that end, under unequal strain from the weight the barge would have to carry. Three tugs made their appearance on the scene; a couple of decked barges were floating near by, and everything was in readiness for a completion of the final preparations. These were brought to a head yesterday morning. Each barge as it was brought into place was sunken to the gunwale by means of an influx of water introduced through plug holes in each compartment, and floated transversely between the piles, occupying positions about 20 feet apart. Additional strengthening timbers were in-troduced, and the false work thoroughly secured to the barges. This successfully ac-complished, the tugs were brought into requisition. Lines of piping, communicat-ing with each of the barges, were brought into play in connection with the pumps on the tugs with the object of clearing the barges of water. barges of water.

HOW THE SHIFT WAS MADE.

Slowly the water was raised from the boats, and as slowly the entire weight of the false work and the bridge on top of it was transferred from the platform of piles to the barges. As the barges lightened they druggists rose slowly above water, until their dis-barges were dry, and then about 1,000 tons of dead weight had been raised about 27 inches, supported evenly along its length by the I-beams, which ran from end to end of the structure. The feat was a thorough suc cess, and was accomplished in about five hours.

A decked barge was next secured at each end of the line of barges, and securely fastened thereto with heavy chains. Each decked barge had two winding engines; one, a 6-spool engine, and a double friction drum engine, and the other a 6-spool and a 4-spool engine. From these seven 11/2-inch and two 2-inch hawsers were run to the opposite shore and securely fast-ened, and with these preparations accomplished the connecting span of the bridge was ready to be floated into its final resting
