IV. Oliver Mankell was again in the charge of Warder Slater. Warder Slater looked very queer indeed-he actually seemed to have lost in bulk. The same phenomenon was observable in the chief warder, who followed close upon the prisoner's heels. Mankell seemed, as ever, completely at his ease. There was again a suspicion of a smile in his eyes and about the corners of his lips. His bearing was in striking contrast to that His bearing was in striking contrast to that of the officials. His self-possession in the presence of their evident uneasiness gave him the appearance, in a sense, of being a giant among pigmies; yet the Major, at least was in every way a higger man than he was. There was silence as he entered, a continuation of that silence which had prevailed until he came. The governor fumbled with a paper-knife which was in front of him. The inspector, leaning forward in his chair, seemed engrossed by his boots. The doctor kept glancing, perhaps unconsciously, at his ing, perhaps unconsciously, at his hat. The chaplain, though conspicuously uneasy, seemed to have his wits about him most. It was he who, temporarily usurping the governor's functions, addressed the

"Your name is Oliver Mankell?" prisoner merely smiled. "You are sentenced to three months' hard labor?" The prisoner smiled again. "For—for pretending to tell fortunes?" The smile became pronounced. The chaplain cleared his throat. "Oliver Mankell, I am a clergythroat. "Oliver Mankell, I am a clergyman. I know that there are such things as good and evil. I know that, for causes which are hidden from me, the Almighty may permit evil to take visible shape and walk abroad upon the earth; but I also know that, though evil may destroy my body, it cannot destroy my soul."

The chaplain pulled up. His words and manner though evidently singers were not manner, though evidently sincere, were not particularly impressive. While they evidently had the effect of increasing his colleagues' unensiness, they only had the effect of enlarging the prisoner's smile. When posed. "I think, Mr. Hewett, if you will permit me. Mankell, I am not a clergyman." The prisoner's smile almost degenerated into a grin. "I have sent for you, for the second time this morning, to ask you frankly it you have any resson to complain of your treatment here?" The prisoner stretched out his hands with his tamiliar gesture. "Have you any complaint to make? Is there anything, within the range of the prison rules, you would wish me to order for you?" Again the hands went out. "Then tell me, quite candidly, what is the cause of your behavior?"

When the governor ceased, the prisoner seemed to be resolving in his mind what answer he should make. Then, inclining his head with that almost saturnine grace, if one may coin a phrase, which seemed to accompanied every movement he made,— "Sir, what have I done?" he asked.

"Eb-eb-we-we won't dwell upon that. The-the question is, What did you do it "It is perhaps within your recollection, sir, that I have my reputation to redeem, my character to reinstate."

"Your character? What do you mean?" "In the first interview with which you favored me, I ventured to observe that it would be my endeavor, during my sojourn withing these walls, to act upon the advice the magistrate tendered me."
"What"—the governor rather faltered-

"He said I claimed to be a magician. He advised me, for my character's sake, to prove it during my sojourn here." "I see. And—and you're trying to prove it—for your character's sake?"

"For my character's sake! But I am but "For my character's sake! But I am but beginning, you perceive!"

"Oh, you're but beginning! You call this but beginning, do your" May I ask if you "Oh, sir, I have still leading on?"
"Oh, sir, I have still leading one whose three months in front of me! Until my term expires I shall go on, with gathering strength, until the end."

As he said this Mankell drew himself the many have that it almost seemed as up in such a way that it almost seemed as stand, though some inches were added to his stature. be a pleasant kind of man!" The criticism seemed to have been extracted from the governor almost against his will, He looked round upon his colleagues with what could only be described as a ghastly grin. "Have you any objection, Mankell, to being transferred to another prison?"

"Sir!" the prisoner's voice rang out, an his hearers started—perceptibly. Perhaps that was because their nerves were already so disorganized. "It is here I was sent, it is here I must remain-until the end." The governor took out his handkerchief and wiped his brow.

"I am bound to tell you, Mankell, judging from the experiences of the last two days, if this sort of thing is to continue— with gathering strength!—the end will not

The prisoner seemed lost in reflection The officials seemed lost in reflection, too; but their reflections were probably of a different kind.

"There is one suggestion I might offer."
"Let's have it by all means. We have reached a point at which we shall be glad to receive any suggestion-from you."

"Give you what?" "You might give me a testimonial."

The governor looked at the prisoner, then at his friends.
"A testimonial! Might we, indeed! What sort of testimonial do you allude my reputation, redeemed my character,— that I had proved to your entire satis action that I was the magician I claimed to be."

"Your suggestion has at least the force of novelty. I should like to search the registers of remarkable cases, to know if such an application has ever been made to the governor of an English jail before. What do you say, Hardinge?"

The Major shuffled in his chair.
"I—I think I must return to town."

The prisoner smiled. The Major winced.
"That—that tellow's pipped me to my

"That—that fellow's pinned me to my chair," he gasped. He appeared to be making futile efforts to rise from his seat, "You cannot return to town. Dismiss the ides from your mind."

The M jor only grouned. He took out his handkerchief and wiped his brow. The governor looked up from the paper-knife with which he was again trifling.
"Am I to understand that the testimonial is to take the shape of a voluntary offering?"

"Oh, sir! Of what value is a testimonial which is not voluntary?"
"Quite so. How do you suggest it should

"May I ask you for paper, pens and ink?" The prisoner bent over the table and wrote on the paper which was handed him. What he had written he passed to the governor.
Mr. Paley found inscribed, in a beautiful fair round hand, as clear as copperplate, the following "testimonial:"

following "testimonial:"
"The undersigned persons present their compliments to Colonel Gregory. Oliver Mankell, sentenced by Colonel Gregory to three months' hard labor, has been in Canterstone jail two days. That short space of time has, however, convinced them that Colonel Gregory acted wrongly in distrusting his magic powers, and so casting a stain upon his character. This is to testify that he has proved, to the entire satisfaction of the undersigned inspector of prisons and officials of Canterstone Jail, that he is a magician of quite the highest class.

"The signatures of all those present should be piaced at the bottom," observed should be piaced at the bottom, because the prisoner as the governor was reading the

"Don't you think, M. Paley, that we had better send for this man?" Apparently Mr. Paley did.

"I—I'd rather not," he mumbled.

"I think you'd better read it," said the goverdor. Thus urged the Major did read it.

"Good Lord!" he gasped, and passed it to the doctor.

The doctor silently, having read it, passed

The doctor silently, having read it, passed it to the chaplain.

"I will read it aloud," said Mr. Hewett. He did so—'or the benefit, probably, of Slater and Mr. Murray.

"Supposing we were to sign that document, what would you propose to do with it?" inquired the governor.

"I should convey it to Colonel Gregory."

"Indeed! In that case he would have as high an opinion of our characters as of yours. And yourself—what sort of action might we expect from you?"

"I should go."

"The governor's jaw dropped.

"Go? Oh, would you?"

"My character regained, for what have I to stop?"

"Exactly. What have you? There's that point of view, no doubt. Well, Mankell, we will think the matter over."

The prisoner dropped his hands to his sides, looking the governor steadily in the "Sir. I conceive that answer to convey

The chaplain was bolding the testim

The chaplain was bolding the testimonial loosely between his fluger and thumb. Stretching out his arm, Mankell pointed at it with his hand. It was immediately in flames. The chaplain releasing it, it was consumed to ashes before it reached the floor, Returning to face the governor again, the prisoner laid his right hand, palm downward, on the table: "Spirits of the air, in whose presence I now stand, I ask you if I am not justified in whatever I may do?"

His voice was very musical. His upturned eyes seemed to pierce through the ceiling to what there was beyond. The room grew darker. There was a rumbling in the air. The ground began to shake. The chaplain, who was caressing the hand which had been scorched by the flames, burst out with what was for him a passionate ap-about to explain that I should esteem it quite an honor to sign your testimonial."

"So would I—upon my soul, I should!" declared the Major.

"There's nothing I wouldn't do to oblige you, Mr. Mankell," stammered the chief warder.

"Same 'ere!" cried Warder Slater:

"You really are too rapid in arriving at conclusions, Mr. Mankell," remarked the governor. "I do beg you will not suppose there was any negative intention."

there was any negative intention,"
The darkness, the rumbling and the shaking ceased as suddenly as they began.
The prisoner smiled.
"Perhaps I was too basty," he confessed. 'It is an error which can easily be recti ied."
He raised his band. A piece of paper

"Add 'Inspector of Prisons."

The Major added "Inspector of Prisons," with a very rueful countenance.

"Mr. Paley, it is your turn."

Mr. Paley took his turn, with a really tolerable imitation of being both ready and willing. Acting on the hint which had been given the Major, he added "Governor" of his own accord.

He signed. When the chaplain signed he shook his head and sighed.
"I always placed a literal interpretation on the twenty-eighth chapter of the first book of Saunel. It is singular how my faith is justified!"

The chief warder placed his spectacles upon his nose, where they seemed uneasy, and made quite a business of signing. And such was Warder Slater's agitation that he could scarcely sign all. But at last the "testimonial" was complete. The prisoner smiled as he carefully folded it in two,
"I will convey it to Colonel Gregory," he said. "It is a gratification to me to have been able to retrieve my character in so short a space of time."
