and the famous advocate of a progressive protective tariff." After some complimentary references to the voters of the State and the pleasure he felt at being among his old friends again the speaker touched upon the low issues presented in the State campaign, now near its close, and then pitched at once into National questions. He said:

1 wish to declare the opinion that the United States has reached a point where one of its highest duties is to enlarge the area of its foreign trade. Under the beneficent policy of protection we have developed avolume of manu-facturers which, in many departments, overruns the demands of the home market. In the field of agriculture, with the immense propulsion given to it by agricultural implement we can do far more than produce breadstuff and provisions for our own people, nor would it be an ambitious destiny for so great a country as ours to manufacture only what we can consume or to produce only what we can

A Demand for Expansion

We are already in many fabrics and in man; products far beyond that, and our great de mand is expansion. I mean expansion of trade with countries where we can find profitable exchanges. We are not seeking annexation of territory. Certainly we do not desire it unless it about come by the volution of a people whe might ask the priceless boon of a place under the flag of the Union. I feel sure that for a long time to come the people of the United States will be wisely content with our present area and not launch upon any scheme of annexa

At the same time I think we should be unwisely content if we did not seek to engage in what the younger Pitt so well termed annexa-For nearly 30 years now the United States has had the great advantage of a protective tariff, by far the longest unbroken period that its industrial policy has been in force since the Federal Government was organised. Happily the great majority of our people, without strict regard to party lines, believe that the results to the American people from the protective policy has been in calculably beneficent, aggregating in a quarter of a century of national and individual wealth beyond anything ever dreamed of before in the

A Necessity of the War.

I do not mention protection, because I intend to speak in reference thereto before this audience. That would be a needless, if not an im-pertinent effort. I merely wish to proclaim its victories. Without protection the United States would have been poor indeed, after the ravages of the war from 1861 to 1865. With proon every section has flourished and prospered, grown and gained. Even where revenue duties have been laid with no expectation of developing industries there have been in many instances great finan-cial and industrial results. The heavy duty on silk was levied primarily not for protection. but simply to secure a targe revenue from one of the luxuries of the rich; but as a consequence of the duty the silk industry has in creased so rapidly that it constitutes one of the leading fabrics of New Jersey, one of the largest manufacturing States of the Union. I could readily advance other illustrations to the same offect

As I have already intimated, I am here to speak of the expansion of our foreign trade, not by any novel process, not by any mode that will shock or disturb home industries, not by any means that will invite our people to rash ents, or that will launch as in doubtful and dangerous investments. What I mean to speak of briefly is a system of reciprocity not in conflict with a protective tariff, but sup-plementary thereto, and presenting a field of prove what is predicted. We may eater into reciprocity with one nation because we find ad-vantage in it. We may decline to enter into reciprocity with another nation because we see no advantage in it. Reciprocity is simply a policy of circumstance to be determined favorably or adversely ac-cording as its operation may make or loss for us. To say that because we enter into recip-rocal relations with one country on one thing we must enter into reciprocal relations with all other countries on all things is to my mind as absurd as to say that if I buy a horse to-day I must necessarily buy a drove of asses to morrow.

When our merchants and bankers come to thoroughly appreciate this fact we shall receive aid and influence in the reform of our trade from a quarter which thus far it has been impossible to enlist.

LONDON, August 25 .- Mr. Gladstone, in an article to The Speaker, eulogizes Dollinger and Newman as two of the most remarkable men of the contemporary Christian church. Each, he says, gave his heart to the Purifier, his will to the will governing the universe. The construction of Dollinger's mind was simple; of Newman's, it was complex, requiring more to be written about. The Cardinal was a subtle far-reaching genius, the shadings of whose thought were like the countless ripples of the sea. He stands in no invidious ples of the sea. He stands in no invidious rivalry as a man of prodigious learning. Referring to Dollinger's address on the Hebrews in Europe, Mr. Gladatone says it was issued when the anti-semilic movement raged in Germany, evidently for the pur-pose of making the Germans sahamed. Dollinger knew, as others did not, the in-credible sufferings of that race—sufferings which dishonor. Europe almost as much as which dishonor Europe almost as much as the sufferings of Ireland dishonor England.

His conscience and sense of justice were offended at the threatened infliction of new injuries. The Latin Church was not in-sensible of the gap in her ranks by the ex-pulsion of Dollinger. He was continually
