SALLIES FROM OUR ALLEY

WEITTEN FOR THE DISPATCE BY THE PHILOSOPHER AND THE RHYMSTER.

PROLOGUE. Strictly speaking, we do not live in the alley. But as the reprof our mansion abuts the con and has been in the habit of doing so for a protracted period, we may be presumed to know something about the neighborhood and the neighbors. From a high moral and hygienic standpoint we have occasionally regretted this near acquaintanceship; but as students of human nature we regard it with feelings of satisfaction and even pleasure. There are two of us; to-wit the Philosopher and the Rhymster. Our habits are irregular and uninteresting. Our manners are genuiuely Bohemian. In personal appearance we are distinctly commonplace, and our only emphatically characteristic traits are of the mind, mental. The Rhymester, for instance, is dreamy and unpractical, as it becomes a Rhymster to be. He has a strong disinclination for hard work; and would prefer to subsist on a little, than be a plutocrat and labor. The Philosopher is shrewd and cynical, with a loty contempt for mankind, and a Diogenic love of ctium cum dignitate.

The birth of these "Sallies From Our Alley"-bantlings of our partnered pens-was brought about much as follows:

The Philosopher had been interrupted on 20 different occasions, while in the construction of a treatise on human asininity. The irritating howlings of alley children, the strident cries of alley rag merchants, the shrill yelps of alley dogs, and the sustained eloquence of the alley debating club, all seemed combined against the completion of that treatise. Now the Philosopher is a very Carlyle in his hatred of disturbance. He threw down his pen and wrathfully ex-

"This alley is an infernal The Rhymster shrugged his shoulders as though he would say, "Kismet!"
"I'm hanged," continued the Philosopher, "if T'll stand it any longer."

The Rhymster elevated his evebrows in a The Rhymster elevated his eyebrows in a way that said plainly enough: "Well, what are you going to do about it?"
"I'll tell you what I'll do!" cried the Philosopher. "I'll write to the newspapers." The Rhymster yawned. That meant 'Agreed, it you do the most of the writing." Such was the beginning of the ensuing veracious papers relating to "Our Alley."

No. 1-Our Alley Itself. Our alley lies in the heart of Pittsburg. It is bounded on the north by a lumber yard, on the south by a livery stable, and on the east and west by the city residences of distinguished Milesian, Italian, Hebrew, and even Chinese families. Its general aspect is like that of most other alleys, only a good deal more so. By "more so" we mean dirtier, worse paved, more malodorous, and more thoroughly imbued with the principle "laissez faire." Indeed, our alley can sold its own against the very greatest of its kind. The Philosopher and the Rhymster are not unlearned in alleys and slums. They know the Bowery, and the Quartier Latin. They have seen London's Whitechapel and Judenstrasse. Their steps have led them into Glasgow's recking "Tail o" the Bank," perhaps the dirtiest and most ruffianly of all. And although our alley is not quite so villainous as many alleys in hose delightful localities, yet it is every bit as dirty and quite as worthy of study.

The history of the alley is enveloped in mystery. Tradition bath it that the alley once a bare, wind-beaten bluff, until some sinewy Celts erected their evries thereon and began the making of a roadway. Since then houses by the score have been breeted, people have been born, have lived. married and died here and the city has ade four distinct and unavailing attempts to pave the aliey. That is the alley's whole ant, however, to think that the old alley, with all its dirt and disreputability, has a a secret story of its own. The Rhymster is very lond of imagining this inner history, in spite of the utter lack of appreciation dispersary to the lack of the lack o ake great fortunes or great names in the road world beyond; about tender friendships and tenderer loves all the more had some foundation in fact. There are human hearts and human feelings in an alley as well as in a faubourg.

A good many of the excentricities of the peccadilloes may also be referred to, but ily in the way of kindness; moreover the better side of the alley, for even alleys have a better side, will be shown up to due ad-

And the very next of our sallies will be upon that most notable of all our alley's institutions;—"The Landlord."

CROWDING THE SCHOOLS.

Suburban Tenchers and Directors Over whelmed With the Little Folks. "Where do all the school children come from?" was the question asked yesterday among school folk as the school principals reported the phenomenal attendance at the majority of the schools. The effect of the rapid transit system on the growth of the suburbawards can readily be seen by the increased school attendance. At the Lincoln schools there are 21 teachers. This week there schools there are 21 teachers. This week there were sufficient pupils for 27 teachers. Principal Grev-s had over 150 in room No. 1 and his office was utilized for school purposes. There are 70 children for whom he cannot find accommodation in his school. In all likelihood a special meeting of the Lincoln School Board will be called to make temporary provision for the youngsters.

meeting of the Lincoln School Board will be called to make temporary provision for the youngsters.

At the Osceola building, Twentleth ward, so great is the rush of pupils that half-day sessions, as they are called, are held for the pupils—that is, a certain number attend school in the morning, and their places in the afternoon are taken by another quota. The new eight-roomed building adjacent to the old Osceola one, and costing $50,000, will not be ready till January I.

The Peebles schools have a big crowd of new pupils, but additional teachers will not be asked for till the new Glenwood building is ready for occupancy, which will not be before November. Work on this building, which was expected to be finished for the opening of school, was delayed on account of the strike among the stonemasons. At the Greenefield avenue school an addition is now necessary. The Minersville schools loom up very high in their school increase. The addition to the Somers street building will not be ready before the holidays. The Mt. Albion school gain is sufficient for three more teachers; Washington schools have over 150 new pupils. The Central Board meets Tuesday evening and a number of additional teachers will be asked for.
