The Duke of Portland's Memoir is a brown filly standing about 15 hands 3 inches in height. She is a beautiful specimen of medium-sized race horse of high class. Her head is neat and blood-like and well set on to a perfectly shaped neck. Her shoulders are very sloping and as well placed as the most fastidious could desire. Her quarters are sufficiently let down, and her hind legs are well under her. She has a fair amount of bone and power: but she is not of what racing-men are fond of calling "the massire type." Her owner's St. Serf, who is by the same sire, St. Simon, is a very different-looking horse. He is probably about 16% hands high, with great length. Like Memoir he is a dark brown, with a good head, neck and shoulders. In the loins be is rather too slack; but his quarters are good. His hocks are just a little too much bent and a trifle too far be-hind his bedy. He also has the fault com-monly known as "showing too much daylight." For all that, he is a great striding horse, with very true action, immense reach and indomita-ble pluck.
