"But I am prepared for them," he said, and taking me into secluded recesses showed me a big seven-shooter that he carried in his hip pocket.

"This is the first time," he said, "that I have carried a weapon, but I am in fear of my life. Nevertheless, I have sent that letter to the Home Office, and have been to-day to Scotland Yard and lodged description of these two assassins, one of whom I knew. I am waiting now for them to appear, and when they do they will either kill me or go to a police station. If they attack me I shall defend myself, and while I shall only use this revolver for selfprotection, if a bullet lodges in a vital part it will be their lookout and not mine."

Labouchere Wanted to See Him. McDermott went on tell me that during the summer, advertisements had appeared in many German and French papers in which Labouchere offered a reward of £50 to learn of his (McDermott's) whereabouts. He had answered this advertisement, he said, but after several intervals with Labouchere had dailed to discover what that gentleman wanted with him. He had also had interviews, he said, with Michael Davitt and on this score he had a grievance. "Davits told me," said McDermott, "that If I would give up certain documents that he said I had in my possession that would liberate the dynamite prisoners now in Chatham prison he would publish in his paper next Tresday a circumstantial report of my death that would rid me of the assassins who had been following me for years, and thus allow me to end my life in peace. Dayitt said that these papers would doubtless incriminate Sir William Harcourt and Lord Spencer, but that he did not care if they incriminated Gladstone himself. What he wanted, he said, was to secure the

Liberation of the Dynamite Prisoners,

and in a letter to me he says that I put those men there and am keeping them there. His letter is distinctly a threatening one, but I have the Government and the police on my side, and I am going to see this thing through."

I called upon Davitt, whom I found in the office of his newspaper, this evening. He laughed heartily when I told him of McDermott and the two assassins. "Who would run any risk," suid he, "for the sake of ridding the world of that poor carcass. However, there is a movement on foot for the liberation of some of the dynamite prisoners. I have new documents to prove that dynamite was put into the hands of a lot of poor, irresponsible, unintelligent Irish by men in the employ of the enemy in New York, Cork and Glasgow for the sole purpose of getting money out of the secret service fund. The Home Secretary has promised to look into the case early this fall, and I confidently expect the liberation of many of these dynamite prisoners.

Two Sides of the Question.

However dastardly the crime may be of any man who wilfully uses dynamite for destruction of his fellow men, it is less than that of the Government agents who decoy underwitted and ignorant men into such a crime. As for Jim McDermott, he has been outwitted, elever scoundrel as he is, and when the time comes I shall have something to say about him. I know all about him where he has been, what he has been doing and where his money comes from. He likes to believe that his movements are enveloped

FALSE CONCLUSIONS.

"Comparisons have recently been made of the surplus, as it is now reported in the Treasury, with the amount reported a year ago, from which the erroneous conclusion is drawn that the present administration has pursued a policy tending toward contraction. In this connection the following anthoritative statement will show the fallacy ot this belief:

of this belief: The amount of net cash, fractional silver and national bank redemption fund in the Treasury on September 1, 1880, was about $141,000,000, The amount of the same items September 10, 1890, was $99,509,220, which demonstrates the fact that over $51,000,000 more money has been paid out since September 1, 1889, than has been paid out since September 1, 1889, has been paid out and over $41,000,000 more money has been paid out since September 1, 1889, has been paid out and over $41,000,000 heitdes. The apparent surplus shown September 10, 1890, of $69,509,220 is made up as follows: Fractional silver coins, about $22,000,000 (unavailable for purchase of bonds); in national depositories, $25,000,000 (and now in circulation.) The engineers have heretofore considered themselves an aristocracy in the railroad employes' organizations, and the strongest in power. Several of the Grand Lodge ers of the Brotherhood of Locomotiv Engineers are pronounced in favor of fedration, and the impression is rapidly gaining ground that a successful railroad strike must call out all employes in the train ser-

Render's Convenience. These two items, amounting to $47,000,000, de-ducted from the $99,000,000, leaves about $52,-00,000, which represents the entire available cash in the Treasury, and that sum is a part of the $55,000,000 of national bank redemption funds made available by recent act of Congress. There is, therefore, not a dollar in the Treasury supplies which came there by custom dues or internal taxes. Hence there is not a dollar Page 9. which represents any hoarding of the currency during the last year. The $55,060,060 above re-ferred to has been in the Treasury for several years, and this fund at one time during the last administration amounted to about $110,000,060. Secretary Windom said that he would probably take steps at once to purchase some Government 4 per cents, but how many he would redeem, he declined to state. He ntends to remain in New York for several days, and take all necessory steps to relieve the stringency in the money market.

FAVOR A LATER DATE.

The Withdrawal of Bonded Goods Will be Extended to February 1.
