TRADITIONS OF A BORDER TOWN

COURSESPONDENCE OF THE DISPATCH. I ST. BOSWELLS, SCOTLAND, September 1.-When you stand among ruins of great temples of the past, whether those temples were the outgrowth of hero-worship, of pure patriotism or of religious adoration and zeal, your entire consciousness is swept by overwhelming though almost indefinable of Jerusalem. emotion. From the harmonies or discords of these effects there is sometimes caught and crystallized from a thrill of feeling an walls, above all else tell you this: That

You will have this flashed upon you at Melrose the moment you see the old clock in its tower and hear its sadly-solemn bell cent pile that the very tomb of Scott must soon be obliterated through the murch of surrounding decay. Both of these once tremendous structures are at the threshold of annihilation. Only the spiritual aspiration, in kind, that created them, remains, Scott's dust mingles with Dryburg's verdure-covered heaps of crumbled sandstone But the intellectual, the spiritual, legacy he left to the world, is immortal. And this is not preaching, unless you wish to call by that name that which flashes in upon you from out the very shadows of these glorious old abbey ruins.

BEAUTIFUL MELBOSE. There is no doubt that Melrose Abbey is yearly visited by more strangers and pilgrims from foreign lands than any other great abbey, castle or palace in Scotland, not except Holyrood Palace, in Edinburgh; and briefly recalling its environment and history will have interest to many. The vale of Melrose lying in the very heart of the valley of the Tweed, just below the confluence of Gala Water, the Yarrow, Etrick Water and the Baver Tweed is perhaps seven miles long. The Tweed gently curves around it from Abbots ord n the west, to the vicinity of Drygrange or the east, bordering and intersecting central spaces of about a mile in breadth, surpassingly rich in pastures, groves, orchards. hamlets and mansions. These are protected by heights picturesquely diversified with tender recesses and wooded braes; while immediately behind the town, to the south, rise those weird. Mons Tremontium of the iomans, the Eildon Hills. Tradition has it that they once formed a single cone, which was cle t in three, during an ecstacy of rage on the part of Scotland's once fam wizard—a real character of flesh and blood and authenticated black-art power—Sir Michael Scott. They are noble heights, around and between which banners of mist are forever floating, as if still signaling the olden Roman hosts, the wigards, the Piets and the Druids they once knew. Sixteen grand terraces rib their lofty sides, recalling those marvelous nature-riddles of the North, the weird and wondrous parallel roads of lone and far Glenroy.

The village of Melrose itself is a compact little mass of curious old houses on the ancient highway between Edinburgh and burgh. The latter is the wasnish old border town once called Jedhart, where, in Border days, they hong all grade of strangers falling into their hands before they tried them; from which genial custom the expression "Jedhart," or "Scotch jus-tice," had its origin. Here and there an occasional modern edifice contrasts strange-ly with the bald, blackened and crazy structures about them; and the latter squat in shrinking groups, patched with glorious carvings stolen from the old abbey, like a finery of a ruined patron.

ANCIENT SUPBOUNDINGS

One quaint, pretty street runs away from the hamlet toward the manufacturing town of Galashiels, to the west, as if ashamed of the squalor of its company; a blank, drear, deserted triangular open space in the center of the village renders it impossible for you to get into or out of it without suffering espionage and levies: a market cross as old as the abbey itself rears its gray and grizzled column in a dreary corner of the town; three or four thoroughfares shut in by ramshackle houses merge into one which leads across the Tweed into near Gattonside, the oddest and sleepiest housing of odd and sleepy folk in all Scotiand; and perched above all, not a thousand feet from the abbey itself, is a smart railway station looking contemptuous-ly down upon the huddled dreariness and ly down upon the huddled dreariness and decay below. From this, or better from the Edwon Hills, Melrose sets in Melrose Vale by the Tweed like a brown and ragged wind-whipped Gipsy tent, embosomed in least four different styles of architecture. wind-whipped Gipsy tent, embosomed in meadow grasses where quivers like a silver thread a besitant, vagrant stream.

But this surpassing ruin to wich you have come was not the first Melrose Abbey. Three miles below the Melrose of to-day the I weed almost forms an island in the valley. This peninsula is a gentle emmence. Its Gaellic appellation was Meall-rois, "the projecting hill." Hence "Mailros," and in ally Melrose. The locality is now known as Old Melrose. The strong natural defenses with the seclusion and luxuriousness of the vale, attracted a colony of mission-ary ecclesiastics from the Culdee Monastery of Iona, in the Hebrides, who here founded a rude chapter house in the seventh century. Its first abbot was Eata. Old Melrose became renowned, but its brethren were banished in 1075 on their re-fusal to acknowledge Malcolm III. as their sovereign. A chanel, dedicated to St. Cuthbert alone survived the destruction which followed. Nearly a century later, in 1136, a magnificent monsstery or abbey was founded by the Scottish King, David I., for Cistercian monks at the then hamlet of For-del, now Melrose, the precise site of the Melrose Abbey of to-day- It was consecrated in 1146, and about two centuries later, in 1322, was nearly destroyed by Edward II., of England, during one of his last forays north of the border. The restoration, or rather reconstruction, of the Melrose Abbey founded in 1136 gave Scotland

THIS SURPASSING RUIN of to-day. Its original completion was the most ardent desire of Scotland's greatest hero-patriot, King Robert Bruce, who, in 1326, granted to its abbot "all the feudal casualties and crown issues of Teviotdale;" and on the death of Bruce at Cardress, in 1329, his heart, which was embalmed to be carried by Sir James Douglas to Palestine, was rescued from the Moors, who slaugh-tered the chivalrous Douglas, and brought to and sepultured in the noble abbey which Bruce so loved. It is authorticated that while the structure itself, covering the outlines of area exist-ing and traceable at the present time, was completed in ten years after its spoliation by Edward II., the Cistertian monks, whose skill in that age in architecture and statuary will remain the wonder of all time, and who regarded lavish ornsmentation of ecclesiastic edifices as one of the highest expressions of religious feeling, were zealously employed over 200 years upon its decoration. Of all the religious diffices created during the period of the Middle-Pointed style, which prevailed from the thirteenth century to about the middle of the fifteenth, or to the time of the Reformation in Scotland, Melrose Abbey was in-comparably the most magnificent and stately, dozen excel all others.

exquisitely chaste and marvelously beau

Surpassing in its day and time of massiv feudal piles and vast religious structures, it still holds the same regal prominence among still holds the same regal prominence among all the countless impressive ruins throughout Great Britian. The immediate surroundings of the abbey are distressing to the stranger. On one side is a grazing ground for sheep. On another, a drear, forlorn, modern graveyard, with thin and meager headstones, is crowded against it. On another, thatched hovels and cabins huddle beneath its graveful butters. huddle beneath its graceful buttresses. And on another, that Cerberus-horror, guarding all that is sweet, sacred and beautiful, in Scotland, a combined inn and tollgate, lays in wait at the only entrance. Scarcely tree, shrub or plant is there to kindly hide the squalor and avarice, or sotten the hurt-ful ravages of time. If you love to contemplate the glorious in pure art, Melrose is a never-ending feast. If, in your liking, even marvelous ruins must be set in the tender framework wrought by nature's re-covering and rehabilitating hands, you will be bitterly disappointed. The church itself is in the form of the cross of St. John

THE CHURCH AND TOWER.

Its length from east to west if 258 feet, the and crystallized from a thrill of feeling an emphatic perception and conviction. Melrose Abbey, roofless to the sky, and Dryburgh Abbey, so nearly leveled that great trees spread strong arms from its crumbling walls, above all else tell you this: That which art tears from nature's arms with foil rails, under which is a bas-relier frieze minates in a stone balustrade with quatrewhich to vainly typify endlessness, nature of roses. The north transept is roofless inexorably demands again. The ideal, the spiritual, in art and all else, alone survives. of this century as a parish church; but the western part is roofless, and the great west entrance is gone. In the south wall are eight windows 16 feet by 8, well preserved measuring off the hours of irrevocable de-cadence; and you will know it at Dryburg when you contemplate the fact that velous east window at its end, are still so little remains of the vast and magnifieverybody has seen through Sir Walter Scott's description in the "Lay of the Last

The moon on the east oriel shone
Through siender shafts of shapely stone,
By foliage tracery combined.
Thou wouldst have thought some fairy's hand
'Twixt poplars straight the osier wand.
In many a freakish knot had twined;
Then framed a spell, when the work was done,
And changed the willow-wreaths to stone.

Indeed, the keynote of the wondrous art exhibited in Melrose Abbey seems to have been this very "foliage tracery combined." The pedestals for all statues, and there must have been upward of 200, are composed or 5 members of cornice, supported by palm-boughs, terminating at the foot in a point with a triple roll. The tracery of the window millions is in age. The pedestals and canopies of the buttress niches are all ornamented in gar-lands of flowers. In the arch of the door once leading to the cloisters, the work upon the fillet is of marvelous conception and execution, the flowers and foliage being separated from the stone behind and suspender in a twisted garland. There is no more superb stonework in all Europe than in the molding, pinnacle work and foliage of the remaining seals of the cloister. The side aisles are formed by light clustered pillars, richly capitalled, with garlands of flowers and soliage disposed delicately in the moldings. One might safely say that the entire decoration of this marvelous interior is sim-ply an unsurpassed nature study of foliage, plants and flowers, wrought in stone to as accurate a semblance as though under the most perfect representation by pencil. To my mind, solemn MAGNIFICENCE AND SPLENDOR has never elsewhere been more perfectly wedded to the very incarnation of the beau-tiful through art. Setting entirely aside the religious associations, those impressive of the mighty dead, or still those more touching and exquisite emotions which are the outgrowth of a consciousness that the eyes and hearts of countless men and women of transcendent genius have feasted upon the splendid shrine, as have yours and mine, I know of no other spot in the three kingdoms where one may come and so worship alone, with the immortal soul of art whis-chiseled stone. If Melrose Abbey furnishes examples of art almost as bewitching as the most delicate expressions of nature itself, Dryburg Abbey, but four miles distant, down the Tweed holds and fascinates the wanderer with a far more tender and subtle charm. The founding of Dryburg is of remoter antiquity than even that of the original Culdee house of Oid Melrose. Before the advent of Christian missionaries the place was resorted to by the Druids for the celebration of their mystic rites—as Darachbruach or burgh, "the bank cluster of sacred oaks," Dryburg's Celtic name, implies. Modan, a Culdee Presbyter, set up the first Christian establishment of Dryburg in 522. For 628 years thereafter its history is insignificant. The monks from Alawick, under the patronage of Sir Hugh de Morville, Constable of Sectland, under King Deniel. Scotland under King David I., founded Sectiand under King David L, founded here a Premonstratentian Abbey of splendid dimensions. This was burned along with Melrose Abbey by Edward II., and restored by aid granted by King Robert Bruce. Twice, in 1385 and in 1554, it was pillaged and devasted by the English. The Reformation of doughty John Kuox, 16 years later, did the rest. VARIOUS ARCHITECTURE.

The ruins of Dryburgh Abbey show This is seen in the massive Roman arch with its ample, square sides; the deepsplayed and always impressive Saxon arch; the pillared and intersected Norman arch; and the early English pointed arch. The church was originally in the form of a cross with short transcepts, and a small but ex-quisitely decorated choir, while the interior was divided by light and graceful colon-nades into a central space and side aisles. Of the transepts a portion of but one, the north, called St. Mary's Aisle, is still standing; but there is a no more beautiful speci-men of the early Gothic to be found in Scotland than is this, the solemn and secluded burial place of Scotia's greatest minstrel, the noble author of "Waverly." The chapter house, a tiny chapel of St. Modan, a Norman arch which formed the western doorway, are yet standing. A stately yew, over 800 years old, still stands upon the lawn, opposite where once the abbots sat a their parlor casements, to mock the huge pile of stone as it crumbles into the earth. EDGAR L. Physicians and Others Testify to His Many

Queer Actions. A DAY'S DRIFT IN THE COUNTY COURTS

The trial of Frank Grade for the murder his 9-year-old stepdaughter, Annie Hofner, was continued in Criminal Court yesterday. August Douch was the first witness. He testified that he was a neighbor and old equaintance of the defendant, but of ate had noticed that his actions were pecuiar and that he had been drinking to excess and appeared to be out of his mind.

William Grade, a brother of the defendant, testified that the afternoon before the norning of the murder, he went to his brother's house and that his brother was walking up and down on the porch, and at first would not notice him. The witness said: "I asked him if be had the work for me that he had promised. He told me that he had never asked me to do any work. Shortly after he asked me if I was not going to do the work, and then he complained of being sick."

James Marshall, a jail keeper, was the pext witness. He said: "I was at the jail when Grade was brought there, and have had charge of him ever since. He is now better than he has been for some time since. Just after he was brought to the jail he would throw himself on the floor of his cell, face downward, and lay there for hours; then he would get up and sit in a chair, staring at one object for hours."

ALMOST GUESSWORK. Dr. Chessrown, the jail physician, testified that in his opinion the prisoner was insane, but that it was almost guesswork to say whether anybody was insane or not. Charles Alburn said that on the afternoon preceding the morning of the murder he met the defendant on Preble avenue, Allegheny, but that the latter refused to notice him. The witness stated that the defendant had a strange look in his eyes, but he did not appear to be intoxicated.

Thomas Farrell testified that he met the defendant in Marce's barber shop, Woods' Run, on the afternoon referred to by the former witness. The defendant had a new paint brush with which he commenced to rush his face, and acted in other ways like an insane man.

an insane man.

John Marce, proprietor of the barber shop, testified that the defendant had come into his place on the afternoon referred to, and got in a chair to be shaved. He did not eem to be intoxicated, but after he had been partially shaved he sprang out of the He was induced to get in again, but repeated the same act three times.

Lewis Hilte testified to the unnatural actions of the defendant for a few days preceding the murder,

Dr. George McCord testified to visiting the prisoner in July at the jail. He said the prisoner glared at him and moved about as if he intended to spring on him. The witness asserted that the man was insane,

THINKS IT ACUTE DEMENTIA.

Dr. Ayres' testimony was similar to that of Dr. McCord. He pronounced the insan-ity that the defendant was suffering from acute dementia, of which one of the characteristics was sudden outbursts of violence, which could take the form of homicide or suicide.

Dr. C. C. Wiley gave similar testimony. He was asked by Attorney W. D. Moore, for the defense, if he believed that the defendant was insane at the time of the mur pering sweetly through the silent lips of der. He replied that with the knowledge of the facts he had of the case and from his own personal examination he would state that, in his judgment, Grade was insane at the time and still is, although now imved. District Attorney Johnston asked the witness if the prisoner was insane at the time of the murder, if he knew he was insane. Dr. Wiley replied: "In my judgment he was insane at that The District Attorney then asked him when the man became insane, but this ques-tion the witness did not presume to answer. Herman Grade, a brother of the defendant, SENTENCED FOR SELLING QUAIL.

Grind of the Criminal Court Continued From

Day to Day. In the Criminal Court yesterday Judge Magee sentenced William Wilkinson to pay a fine of $200, and in default of payment, 200 days in jail. Wilkinson, on information of the Game Warden, was convicted of misdemeanor for selling quail within the prohibited time. He had bought the quail in another State, and the question of law in the case was argued before Judge Ewing. He handed down an opinion a few days ago, holding that Wilkinson's act had been a violation of the law, and he was sentenced yesterday, accordingly. An application will be made to the Supreme Court for a special allocatur, and the case taken there

WASHINGTON PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

-Rev. E. S. Farrand, pastor. Services at 10:30 A. M. and 7:30 P. M., in the Mt. Washington THE dedication of the M. E. Church at Federal, Pa., September 13 and 14, was one of the great religious events of the season. Among those who took a leading part in the services were Revs. D. McKee, of Bridgeville, and Mr. Hatfield, of Midway. Mr. A. Peacock, of the Southside, also did his part to make the service a success. The Federal M. E. Church is profoundly grateful to the above named brethren for their assistance.

The Pittsburg annual M. E. Conference will convene at Greensburg on October 1. Bishop Mallalien will preside. There are in round numbers 180 ministers in this conference, and it is presumed that all will be present, as their is presumed that all will be present, as their destiny for the year to come is to be determined at this conference. Chaplain McCabe, who represents the missionary cause of the church, will be present. The Chaplain has achieved fame as a singer, as well as in missionary and army lines. With the assistance of the White brotners, of Canada, he has added very much to the interest of this fall's conferences by the introduction of music. Bishop Malialien is of New England birth and Huguenot extraction, and is one of the strong men of the M. E. Church.

THE Northern Convention of the Episcopal Church held its fall meeting in Trinity Church, New Castle, on Monday and Tuesday of this week. The session opened on Monday evening with full choral Evensong, and a sermon by the Rev. Y. Peyton Morgan, dean of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, O., on "Lay Work," cathedral, Cleveland, O., on "Lay Work," especially addressed to the members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrews, a general society of young men banded together for church work in the various parishes of the Episcopal church throughout the United States. The chief service on Thesday morning was a choral celebration of the Holy Communion at 10 A. M., with the Rt. Rev. C. Whitehead as celebrant, assisted by the Rev. Rogers Israel, of Meadville. The music for the service was composed by the rector, Rev. J. D. Herron, and was well rendered by a chorus choir of young ladies. A discussion on "Deaconesses and Sisterhoods," opened by the Rev. L. J. Keech, of St. Clement's Church, Greenville, followed the service and was participated in by several of the visiting clergy. At the close of this the "Religious Instruction to the Young" was discussed, after which lunch was served in the Guild Hall by the ladies of the parish. In the afternoon "The Cure of Souls," and "How shall the fasting days of the church be observed?" was discussed by the Revs. Henry Purdon, W. B. Thorn, A. D. Fleming, Rev. Charles Bragdon and others. On Tuesday evening a special musical service was readered, and addresses on "Mission Work" were delivered by the Rev. Rogers Israel and John Huske, of Erie.

N FAVOR OF DR. BYERS'METHOD OF TREAT-MENT-A DESCRIPTION OF THE ANTISEP.

Mr. Fred Haus, Sylvian Street, City. Mr. Fred Haus, Sylvian Street, City.

Mr. Haus is employed at Jones & Laughlins' American Iron Works. For three years he had been troubled with his stomach and shortness of breath. Never had any sickness before. Trouble began with weakness and loss of appetite. When he came to Dr. Byers' office he was losing flesh rapidly, had cough morning and evening, night sweats and the usual dyspeptic trouble which follows such a train of symptoms, coated tongue, bad taste in the mouth in morning, bloating and belching up of gas after eating, palpitation of the heart, dizziness, etc., etc.

gas after eating, palpitation of the heart, dizziness, etc., etc.

He was induced to try Dr. Byers through the testimony of a fellow workman in same mill, Mr. John Lewis, and was entirely relieved of all the troubles after thorough and systematic courses of treatment of five months. The only unpleasant symptom he has left is an occasional palpitation when he gets a bad cold, caused by an unusually irritable heart. DR. BYERS' METHOD OF TREATMENT.

DR. BYERS' METHOD OF TREATMENT.

A porcelain-lined cylinder, filled with purified coudensed air, by which the Dector treats catarrh of the nose, throat and upper air passages. This air passes through a flexible tube, at the end of which there is a spray generator, formed of two glass tubes, one of which turns downward, and is inserted into a medicated fluid, which the air sucks up in minute quantities and trajects out into the form of an atomized vapor. With a pressure of 20 pounds to the square inch, it will throw a spray of four feet in length and of considerable volume. This spray not only cleanses the inflamed membrane of the viseld exerction which collects on its surface, but deposits remedial agents upon the irritated membrane, peduces the inflammation and southes it. This renders a cure much more speedy than can be effected by any other means, and leaves the parts fresh and clean after each application, thereby promoting the comfort of the patient during the progress of cure.
