INCIDENTS OF THE WAR. Union Soldier's Stories That Historian

Generally Overlooked. (WHITTER FOR THE DISPATCH.) At the battle of Chancellorsville the hair-raising order was threatened to form the two batteries, Hampton's and Knapp's, of Pittsburg, in a hollow square, that is make a square of the two batteries, composed of six guns each, and put the men inside this square and keep them there to fight, but the order was not issued. Had it come it would have been promptly obeyed, for there never were two hatteries in the service that possessed any superior qualities as fighters to those two from Pittaburg. It was in this battle that the brave, kind and generous Captain R. B. Hampton, Commander of Hampton's Pittaburg battery, lost his life. A cannon ball took off one of his legs. His remains were taken to Pittaburg and interred in the Allepheny Cemetery. Immediately back of the hearse was the captain's horse, a noble perfectly black animal, which on all occasions excepting in this battle carried his brave commander. keep them there to fight, but the order was not sented to the veterans of Homestead under the direction of Comrade Frank Nail, of Mans-field, with the popular J. Milton Hays, of this city, in the role of Mart Howard.

As a general rule, the private soldier car give a more accurate description of a battle than a General for the private, if he is a good soldier, is right in the midst of the condict and, if observant, can see more than the General, whose duty it is to issue orders upon information given him. In the case of the battle of Chancellorsville, had the privates who were in the fight on the Sunday morning of the retreat had authority to use their artillery on the enemy retreat would not have occurred.

THE battle at Chancellorsville on Saturday THE battle at Chancellorsville on Saturday night, May 3, was one of the grandest sights that could be witnessed. While the shells with their long flery tails went on their death dealing errands and bombs burst in air there started vp such a mighty shout of song in the woods that had Pittsburg been nearer the field the whole city would have joined in the familiar airs of "Star-Spangled Banner" and "Red, White and Blue" which drowned the cannon's boom.

How frequent the error is committed by writers and speakers in alluding to charging under"grape and canister fire." Such an article as grape was not used upon any battlefield during the war. It is distinctively naval, and has no connection with field service.

SPIES or sympathizers often became to reckless for their necks' welfare. At the battle of Antietam an individual emerged from a cluster of trees opposite the Union army and with slow and measured tread passed through the lines. In attempting to return by a different route he was captured, tried at General McCiellan's headquarters via drumhead courtmartial and sentenced to be hanged. Before martial and sentenced to be hanged. Before the sentence was put into execution, he told the court that he was measuring the distance between their line and ours, and it is supposed the enemy had counted the number of steps taken by him, for in a very brief time their artillery opened on us, and with such accurate aim that to stay and reply was impossible.

THE Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania Regiment Colonel J. W. Geary commanding, was in the corn field at Antietam, a position not at all enviable. It was due to their staying qualities that the enemy was foiled in an undertaking which, if it had been successfully executed, would have prolonged the contest. But the Twenty-eighth was there to stay, and it did

In the wheat field at Gettysburg a Pittsburg General, now deceased, General J. B. Sweitzer, and his command, did more downright fighting than any other set of men in that battle. To quote General Sicoum, who commanded the Twelfth Corps in this fight; "Right down there," pointing to the wheat field, "was the hardest and most stubbornly contested engage-ment in the whole battle, and a General from Pittsburg by the name of Sweitzer was in command. Any of the survivors of this brigade will appreciate the estimate thus publicly placed upon them by their Corps General. The Pittsburg General was told what General Slo-cum said. His modest reply was: "It was pretty hot there."

Ir may be held by some to be discourteous to speak of the Confederate Commanding General as taking undue advantages, but he did the Seminary building, which was used as a the Seminary building. Which was described a signal corps, and he was seen there while the yellow hospital flag was floating below him. A battery was trained on him, but the order to fire was not given.

Brightening Up at Home. PROSPECTIVE MILLIONAIRE.

How the Late James Park Managed to Combine Comfort and Business.

It was stated at the close of last week that Wall street speculators had taken to their holes and pulled the money panic in along with them. The speculators came out, but the panic is there yet. There is not a trace of it on the financial horizon. "Money is easy in New York" is the burden of the daily reports from that city. Here it has been easy enough all along. At no time this season have good borrowers been re-fused accommodations. The only effect of the stringency was to make financiers a little more cautious in making loans so as to protect home interests. There was no advance in

THE NEWS AND GOSSIP OF THE CITY

Resources of the local banks were largely increased during the past week, due to liberal de-positing by manufacturers and merchants, whose sales were unusually heavy, and any lingering apprehensions of a further contraction were entirely dissipated. The signs all point to season, as well as to a heavy trade.

He Has a Good Thing.

A modest, unpretending tradesman bought a lot some years ago on a prominent street in Oakland and settled down to build up his business with the growth of the street. He did not want to go West, and took chances in the suburbs of this big city. His lot, 22x100, cost about $500 seven years ago, and he had no near neighbors to distract him from his business or menace him in the enjoyment of his own little cottage. He is a bachelor, and a carpenter, and, having no one to look after or provide for. takes life easy. He makes and repairs Venetian blinds, screens for doors and windows, ironing boards, and almost anything required in that line, and he exposes them for sale before his little shop.

The neighborhood has grown very much since he pitched his tent and his more aristo-cratic neighbors feel that he should either give up the ghost or sell out. He will do neither. He has been offered about five times as much for the lot as he gave for it, but to all appeals he shakes his head and keeps the plane moving. He has been sued for allowing the water to course over his little roof on to an adjoining lot. Like Job, he murmurs not, but increases the price of his lot. When the street was graded it was thought the march of progress might suggest to him some other spot. He paid the bill like a major and doubled up the price of his lot. They then sewered it and had no idea he could survive this raid upon his treasury. He paid this bill also and again doubled up on the price of his lot. As he sits in the evenings before his little cottage the smiles upon his face play like sunbeams at the thought that if values keep rising in the same ratio for the next 25 years Atwood street will have at least one millionaire.

The man is not disliked for any personal reason, but his little shop is said to have no reflective value. The man evidently appreciates this fact and realizes that he has a good thing and the only thing of the kind in the neighborbood that grows without effort. It is said that he has been offered a very nice brick house with mansard, bath, vestibule, electric bells, tile hearths, speaking tubes, plate glass win dows, and a lot on a paved street, for his lot ern two-story brick dwelling, with lot 22x108 and shop, and yet he is immovable. Frequently in case of accident, or when orders are to be hurried, I am here all night. Some of the most anxious hours of my life are spent in this room. I visit my family as often as possible, but this is as much my home as the one in which my wife and children reside. This is why I surround myself with the conveniences and comforts you see here." This is a phase of business life not generally understood, but it is none the less worthy of imitation for that. Business is business is an old saying, but it does not follow that it should descend to drudgery. Like everything else, it is susceptible of amelioration. Mr. Park found a way to relieve it of some of its disagreeable features, and what he did others can do. Business men cannot put off care and responsibility, barmonions and attractive and in this way provide for their physical comfort while dis-

Quite a Difference. A is a grain merchant. He buys 1,000 bushels of wheat, actually buys it, and pays $1 a bushel. The wheat is shoveled into bins, and he holds it for a rise. He sells it for $1 50. He makes $500, and is pronounced a shrewd financier and an honorable man. B agrees to deliver to C, in three months, 1,000 bushels of wheat at $1. Wheat declines to 50 cents, and he also makes $500. He is called a gambler and a criminal. Both have dealt in "futures." Both are speculators. Please tell us the difference. A buys the farmer's product at the market price, pays for it, preserves it, and afterward sells it at the market price. Thus he furnishes the farmer a market for his grain, puts the full money value of the grain in circulation, and when he sells the wheat, supplies the deand when he sells the wheat, supplies the demand of the market and the wants of the consumer. This is legitimate business. That he withholds the grain from the market for a time may be a necessary part of wise economy. It prevents waste in time of plenty, and famine in may be a necessary part of wise economy. It prevents waste in time of plenty, and famine in time of scarcity. B simply bets with C on the future price of grain. He furnishes no market for the farmer, and no supply for the consumer. He may buy millions of bushels of wheat and yet not take one bushel out of the farmer's bin or put a dollar into his pocket, or put a bushel of wheat in the mill. There is a difference.

The property of the Love Manufacturing Company was sold at Rochester, Pa., yesterday to Charles Davidson for $14,500, subject to a mortgage of $8,000. A good feature of the local stock market, as developed yesterday, was a greater degree of confidence than expressed for some time, due principally to the easing up of monetary matters. This should stir up business.

There is a good deal of dickering in the get at. A full account of syndicate operations in that ward will be available for publication in a week or two. Nearly all the transactions have a bearing directly, or indirectly, upon the projected electric road to Homestead, which ems to be assured.

Twenty-eight mortgages were received by the Recorder yesterday, of which ten were for pur-chase money. The largest was for $5,000. Farm lands in Ohio are not held at an excessively high figure. A body of 110 acres in county has just been sold at a fraction over $45 an acre.

The New York bank statement posted yester-

Some lawyers are poor judges of the value of real estate. One of them was called upon a few days ago to examine the title of a piece of property in one of the outlying districts. Being acquainted with the locality, he remarked to the purchaser: "What did you buy that stuff for? It will not be opened up for 20 years.' The purchaser smiled, but said nothing. Yesterday the lawyer was informed that "that stuff" had been resold at a big advance.

Another geal in acreage was consummated restorday, when 12 acres near the Duquesne Fraction loop on Highland avenue, near Bryant street, changed hands at $30,000, or $2,500 per acre. The purchasers have made other large investments in the same district, but are not quite ready to divulge the facts.

The reference to Perrysville ave, in THE DIS-PATCH seems to have served a good purpose in stimulating inquiry and hastening sales. During the week Reed B. Coyle & Co. sold ten lots in the Watson place plan on the avenue in question at prices ranging from $800 to $1.800. The purchasers in all cases will make improve-ments. This district possesses many attrac-tions and advantages for suburban homes. Alles & Bailey sold for E. P. Stock Brokers Holding on for a Turn in the Tide.

Sales of local stoks on call during this week were something over 1,000 shares. There was only one transaction yesterday. Ten shares of Pittsburg Plate Glass brought 195, a sharp advance over the last previously reported sale. An attempt was made to infuse some life into railroad shares, bu; the only result was to increase the number of bids. Holders refused to accept the figures offered.

Closing prices of the leaders, as compared with those of the previous Saturday, show the following results. The Week Closes With a Distinct/Improvement in Monetary Matters.

Bank rates for money were steady during the past week at 6@7 per cent, and closed on that basis. There was a good demand for funds to strengthen existing enterprises and develop new ones. The supply was equal to requirements. More confidence was apparent and an easier feeling prevailed.

That business continues to move on its usual high level is shown by a gain of nearly $2,500,000 in bank clearings over the same week last year. The excess of clearings this year so far over 1889 is $111,429,075 83.

This condition, with refined at the top of the year and crude at the bottom, is something year and erude at the bottom, is something hard to understand, but the trade has about concluded it is due to manipulations of the Standard to crush speculation in the Pennsylvania product so as to have a clear field for Buckeye. This is as good an explanation as any, and is probably the correct one. Certain it is, that if left to itself, the market would mount to a higher level, and this would attract outsiders.

Remarkably Pavorable Bank State-

NEW YORK, September 27.-The stock mar ket to-day was quiet to dull for the general list, but the continuance of the bear pressure upon a few of the leading stocks created ctivity in these shares and gave tone to the utire list. The market displayed a marked lack of support from the earlier dealings, and the bears, notwithstanding the fact that a very favorable bank statement was expected, in-creased their sales of short stocks as the time were along and the last prices are at, or near, the lowest of the day.

The pressure was most prominent upon

The pressure was most prominent upon Atchison, Pacific Mail and Sugar, and each of these short stocks scored material losses in the short session. The President of the Pacific Mail was quoted as saying that there was little hope of the passage of the subsidy bill in the present session of Congress, and the stock became a shining mark for the operations of the bears, and it was forced off from 42% to 40 and

Sugar was sold on the compromise of the sugar tariff, which is looked upon as not favorable enough to the refiners, and large amounts of the stock changes hands at constantly declining figures. Atchison was pressed for sale and steadily declined, with no developments, but plenty of talk of business troubles in Boston

The general list opened heavy, though first prices were generally slightly higher and sympathized closely with the weakness in the leading shares, and, while there were frequent slight rallies, most of the list closed off small fractions from last night's prices. The loss in Sugar was 1½, in Atchison 1½ and in Pacific Mail 1½.

Sugar was 1½, in Atchison 1½ and in Pacific Mail 1½.

Railroad bonds were very quiet and showed little feature, but the tone was heavy with only slight thanges, even among the leading issues. Government bonds have been dull and steady. The exports of specie last week amounted to 314,000, all gold. The imports of specie during the week amounted to 5198,325, of which $153,280 was in gold, and $45,545 silver.

It seems inevitable, however, that it must come some time soon; the short interest is so large that any attempts to cover it would make a sharp upward movement in prices.

The bank statement was a remarkably favorable one in every respect, and shows that the banks have recovered from their expanded condition, as will be seen by the fact that the average of the total loans for the past week was equal to only 26,34 per cent of the deposits, whereas on last week's statement they were equal to 100% per cent, and the previous week 102% per cent, it must, moreover, be borne in mind that the present statement is made on rising averages, and that the real condition of the banks to-day is much easier than is shown

NEW YORK, September 27 .- The bank state-

NEW YORK, September 27.—The bank statement showed better than expected, the increase in reserves being over $12,000,000 and in actual cash nearly $17,000,000. The market gave no response to these favorable figures, and this was more noteworthy because it was fair to suppose the bears would take advantage (as many doubtless did) of the lowest prices of the week to cover short sales. The outlook for Monday is lower prices.

is lower short saies. The outdook for monday is lower prices.

The Drygoods Chronicle, of this morning, says: "It is very evident to the eyes of anyone familiar with the New York drygoods market at this time, that the edge of the rush was worn off, and that the top notch has been reached and passed, and yet it is a fact that the bonded warehouses are now full of imported goods.

and passed, and yet it is a fact that the bonded warehouses are now full of imported goods, brought here to take advantage of the advanced tariff, and in quantities far in excess of immediate requirements. Does it require any superior knowledge of the business situation to suggest to one's mind the probable results of this glut in the market? Will not the ultimate benefits of the tariff bill to the American manufactures be very much diminished by the important of the superior of the superi ufacturers be very much diminished by the im-modiate injury which will be done to them by these excessive importations?"
