The chute was 200 feet in length, and was worked to an average depth of 75 feet. The ore became low grade at that depth and, in those days of high prices, could not be worked at a profit. The mine was then abandoned for a number of years, but during the past ten years has been worked by different men, and other chutes have been opened and yielded fairly. The ore, it is believed, will now pay well. The mine is owned by New York and Boston men, who are pushing the work. The richest silver ore ever discovered in this country is on or near the road leading to Boise City and 18 miles from this place. Strange as it may seen, these ledges cropped and the rock has been tested by prospectors for 25 years, and, to use a prospector's phrase, they said it con-tained nothing but "pyrites of poverty" and "chlorides of assessments." Prospecting until recently has been carried on in bhis section by old placer miners, who have but little knowl-edge of silver ores and have prospected for free gold. The free gold prospector had noticed this "yaller stuff," which he mistook for oxide of iron or some other valueless oxide, pounded the rock in a hand mortar, panned it out, got no gold and pronounced it no good. Experienced prospectors, familiar with all kinds of ores, saw at once that the ores con-tained chlorides, but they kept the matter quiet until they secured all the locations they desired.
