DEATH BY THE WIRE

Not Half So Frequent as Annihilation by Rolling Off Roofs.

BUT IT EXCITES LOTS MORE TALK.

The Disposition to Neglect the Courtesies Due the Fair Sex

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE DISPATCE.]

NEW YORK, October 2.-The electrical problem gets a thorough prodding now and then by the New York newspapers. Every time a lineman is roasted by the wires the electrical companies get "roasted"

"Somebody ought to hang for this," said an indignant bystander in the excited mob that surrounded the pole on Broadway when they were taking down the dead and partially incinerated body of Lineman Kopp. It is certainly offensive for pleasure seekers coming out of a theater to be confronted with the horrible sight of the dead body of a feliow creature suspended among the wires in midair and with the still more disagreeable smell of roasting human flesh. It is also offensive to metropolitan tastes.

Nobody has been hanged and nobody has been even indicted for manslaughter on account of these electrical accidents. Why? Because in every case of the 21 fatal accidents, with two or three exceptions, the cause was found to be in the carelessness of those who were killed. Leaving out the exceptions the victims were men who worked every day among the wires and were fully acquainted with the dangerous nature of their business. The case of Lineman Kopp, who worked at night with his rubber gloves in his pockets instead of on his own hands, is of a piece with most of those cases that pre-

Remarkable Recklesaness. The fact that Kopp was the twenty-first man killed in the past four years is not so surprising to me as the fact that no more have been killed. Without offering any excuse for the electrical companies, who have shamefully neglected to interpose proper barriers between the public and the foolkiller, it is just as well to draw attention to the bottom facts. I see linemen every day on housetops and up telegraph poles working among the wires without taking any precautious whatever to guard against live wires and dead men. The very morning after the unfortunate Kopp's death a man was up a Broadway pole within two blocks of where the accident occurred, doing precisely what Kopp did. Of course, the rents were supposed to be turned off. As a matter of fact some circuit is always in ope-

These accidents by electricity strike a peculiar note of terror in the public mind. Columns upon columns are devoted to every one. They turn the city upside down, metaphorically speaking. During the hot weeks o' summer another class of fatal accidents were usualty bunched together in a stickful, two, three, four and as high as five us. Let them remain there, along with re-

Rolling Off the Roof.

These accidents occurred daily and nightly. They were rolling off of housetops and falling out of windows. For the last hot week I noticed the frequency of these. Every morning at break ast as I read the paper having the largest circulation, my wife invariably asked me: "How many people rolled off the roof last night?" There was never less than two a day, and ran from that to five. As this class of accidents is almost unknown outside of New York, it seems necessary to explain that people here do not mount the housetops for the express purpose of rolling off. They go up there to sleep. The crowded tenement districts are We have not yet adopted the parapet of Italy, but the Italian has adopted our roof. When he goes up there to sleep he is in America. After he is asleep he is probably in Italy. If he should be a little restless or somnambulistic he is likely to be somewhere else before morning. Sometimes it is from the roof, sometimes from a window or a fire escape. After the thing is over it is wholly immaterial, as a man who falls four or five stories to a stone pavement is scarcely worth picking up, and this is usually done with the aid of a broom and dust-pan.

Looks Inconsistent.

He is just as dead as though he had been killed by civilized lightning. What puzgles me is this: Why should a man who is killed by an electric wire get 30 or 40 columns of obituary and a man who rolls off the roof receive but five or ten lines? It reminds me that Kemmier, who died by wire in a New York prison, got more legal and newspaper attention than Guiteau, who killed a President. Nobody knows to-day who Kemmler killed. New York has had 21 deaths by electrical accidents within four years—one in '86, four in '87, six in '88,

Perhaps double that number of persons have fatally rolled off the roof in three months this summer. I can show you New York papers that group these high rollers under a general head in minor local notices, two to five in a stickful or twoof small type, merely giving name and place and the bare first. Here is a box as large as a peck measure attached to the last fatal pole on Broadway. Above it is a request for con-tributions in aid of the family of the deceased lineman, Kopp. There is a stack of bills and coin in that box four inches deep. What becomes of the families of the mer who roll off the roof? Perhaps the time may come when an accidental death by electricity will be just the same as an accidental death by any other way. Just at present electricity has the call.

The Gentlemen of New York. "I have never seen a gentleman in my year's sojourn in New York," said a young lady from the South the other day. "I mean a 'gentleman' as we understand them in the South." She pronounced the word in that deliciously provincial way so sweet to those who have enjoyed social relations with the people of that section-"Soouth," "I may have met them without knowing it," she continued, "for I am not a mindreader. There are plenty of men to be seen every day here who have the outward charscienistics of gentlemen, good clothes and evident taste, but outward appearances are very deceptive, and I am no smarter than other people in reading what lies beneath. A Southern gentleman is not only polite to ladies everywhere—he is considerate of the comfort and pleasure of others. Where do you see these characteristics in public here?

In the streets they stare a lady out of countenance or puff cigarette smoke in her face. On the street cars or elevated trains they let her hold on to a strap, sometimes even grudgingly moving along where there is ample room for her to sit. And where an exceptional case occurs and one gets up to offer her a seat, it is done in a manner that says as plainly as so many words, 'I don't like to do it.'

Not So in Dixie.

"I have had men offer me a seat in a way that made the act a little short of an insult. A Southern gentleman would not do that. I never knew a lady to be compelled to stand up in a public conveyance in the South. More than that, any kind of a woman would not be allowed to hang on to a strap while a robust man remained seated. Greater conwomen in a Southern street car than is shown by New Yorkers to ladies. And to O. R. R. Train leaves at S. M.

each other! Heavens; but how they treat

There is much justice in the criticism tha the New Yorker of the best type is not the 'gentleman' known to the South. The most conspicuous difference is probably in the lack in the former of that kind courtliness of manner which has distinguished the Southern gentleman from the earliest period But I am informed by a well known Southerner that this difference is growing pre-ceptibly less, to the discredit of the South. "The social conditions of the South are slowly but surely changing," said he "Much of it is the natural growth of the new order of things, the business energy and habits of personal industry being now culti-IS A RESULT OF WOMAN'S PROGRESS

The Other Side.

"A Southerner in business in New York," he added, "soon becomes a New Yorker, and even the habitual courtesy to women soon rets worn threadbare. This, however, is as much the fault of womankind as it is the social condition of the metropolis. The New York woman is a creature of self-assertion, independence, indifferent to opinious—a marvelous piece of selfishness and impoliteness in contact with her own sex. Supoliteness in contact with her own sex. Superficially speaking, men are just what women make them. The so-called 'gentlemen' of any city will present a pretty accurate reflex of the sharacter of the 'ladies' of the place. The sountain of all social culture lies in women and the stream will not rise higher than its source. So the New York gentleman must not be expected to average any better than his mother, his sisters and his consins and his anets."

ters and his cousins and his aunts."

The New York women of society I have met in public, in street cars, on the ele-vated, on Broadway, in the theaters, fully justify this conclusion. A more selfish, im-pertinent, case-hardened lot of femininity I never saw anywhere else in Christendon That politeness which should be in the hear is to her either wholly unknown or else ha world. Politeness from the other sex is wasted on her. She does not encourage such a thing in public. In private I don't know what she does.

Equality of the Sexes.

This is a special condition, growing ou of an era of colossal tortunes rapidly made and recklessly spent-out of the necessity or opportunity, which makes thousands of women self-supporting and independent of male assistance-out of the growing uni versality of club and hotel life in place of home and home circle. It is a condition not essentially inimical to a high civilization, or necessarily discreditable to man-hood and womanhood. It is rather a new civilization. A man need not acquire the airs of a dancing master to be a gentleman. Nor do I think it follows that he has the most regard for the opposite sex who hope up whenever a pretty woman enters a car. This is the superficial and common of a gentleman, I know, but it is not the common evidence of one in New York nowadays. The old time courtesy and elaborate mostly on the surface. The present age is more cold-blooded and truthful. Its polite-ness is blunt, its methods business-like. This everyday work of men and women side by side in all the avenues of trade, takes the airy nothingness off of their relations and reduces the sexes to an equality of toil and independence of each other, even in social pleasure. The polite ages, when women were merely toys or serfs, are behind ligious cruelty, the chivalric duello and human slavery. To us belongs the more expanded time of machinery, equality of the sexes, human freedom and liberal laws.

To-Morrow. GLEANINGS FROM CHURCH PIELDS

The "Congregational Year Book," recently issued for 1890, under the supervision of Rev. Henry A. Hazen, of Auburndale, Mass., is a model in its presentation of church statistics. As a statistician Mr. Hazen has done the best work of the year by furnishing in compact form and in a way that makes the facts concerning the past and present of American congregationalism accessible to the inquirer without any waste of

In a study of the Year Book for a few evenings the following facts were elicited: Congregationalism in the United States has had its most complete development in Mas-sachusetts and Connecticut, where the pilgrims first planted their stakes. The entire benevolent contributions of the Congregational churches the year past amounted to $2,398,037. Of this amount $1,004,660 were contributed by these two States. Massachusetts quota was $658,079.

With a Congregational Church member-ship in the United States of nearly 600,000 Massachusetts has over 100,000 and Connecticut close to 60,000.
