as one of the witnesses; the "rosy checkit" Alloa girls accompanying the pair had hustled the bride until the window pane rattled, for the one first rubbing her let shoulder against a bride's leit shoulder wi first be married; with laughter and jest an many a sally at the captured parson, we all partook of the wedding dinner, done to turn, and all the more graciously served a the landlady got two prices or at least tw plates of it; my friend surely got a sovereig for his entorced clerical lubors-and I, wit the good fortune ever favoring those rescue lovelorn tolk from plight and dis tress, was, in turn, perforce made to come to the clorious North with my home in a swee old manse where I could see, for so lo my ancy willed, life as it truly is in th very heart of the remotest Highlands of Scot

it was a strange, weird conchload of folk, speaking in a strange, weird tongue, and we rolled rapidly slong through a strange, weird country. Every soul of the dozen or more within the wagonette, but mysel, stoke the Gaelie tongue, and not a word was spoken during the entire journey in English, save when I was addressed. It wis an immediate revelation of a condition of things in the Highlands which even intelligent Scotchmen in the large lowland cities are unacquainted with, or affect to be ignerant of. From every source of book, newspaper and oral information outside the Highlands, you gain the impression that the Gaelic language is dead; that perhaps somewhere among the peat and mists of in-accessible peaks in Donegal and Connaught, in Ireland, or of Sutherland, Ross, Skye and the Hebrides, in Scotland, there are a few old men and women who have retained a few words of a language once common to the Cymric Celts; indeed that the Gaelie language, with the crumbling remains of the glorious antiquities of Ireland and Scot-land, are but the fabrics of zealots' dreams.

THE ORIGINAL GAELIC. But it you will come far enough you will find this language in all its original rich-ness, purity and power, and will be ded to know that every soul in many districts in Ireland, and, geographically, in the larger portion of Scotland, speak it every waking hour of their lives precisely every waking hear of their rives precisely as their forefathers spoke it for unknown cycles of years before them. "Oh, yes," explained my friend, "we are sill Gaelic still, north of Perthshire and Aberdeen-shire, and in all the outlying islands." And then modestly, and as though there might be something of the lingering old Jacobitic sedition in it: "I preach to my people in Gaelic every other Sunday. "And do they all understand it?

"Understand it! They will tell you that Adam moke Gaelic: that the Scripture can e alone properly expounded in Gaelic; my English sermons are given to empty benches. the Gaelic Sundays bring hearers from 20 miles away; and every lace is a picture of radiant devotion and joy-even to the last one of their brave collie dogs!"

Bless them for loyalty to their, traditions and language, it must be so; for below and behind us there came a roar of song that echocd wildly through the glens and passes. They had worn out the thread-bare gossip of Strathglass, and, as all without exception had had the cockles of their hearts warmed a little this day by "a cinder in their glasses," as the Highlanders affectionately term a drop of peut whisky, moodiness and silence, after "the ceilidh" or gossiping was exhausted, were succeeded by impetuous song. "Coire Chesthaten was the very title, the first one they sang and the very title, steawy, from coire, kettle and cheathaich, steamy, vapary, or "The Misty Dell" as applied to a loved Highland valley or hollow, is illus-trative of the exquisitely poetic significance of words in all Gaelle original.

A RELIGIOUS DISPUTE.

"It will be my turn soon!" said my friend in a whisper and with a grimace of resigna-

"Your turn?"

"Taey will tire of their 'Misty Dell' shortly, and then every one, women and all, will begin such a doctrinal experition and catechism as, could you hear it in English, you would regard as little eise than assault Oh, yes, every one of my flock, and indeed gheny there are not less than 200 places of religious worship. The percentage of church-going people in these two cities is as large as that of any city in the land. It is a low estimate to put the congregations which assemble to-morrow in church and chapel in these cities at 150,000 persons. A score or more of our churches have a membership of 500 and upward, and congregations of 1,200 to 1,500 persons. In church and Sanday school the "old, old story" will be told to-morrow in the various city churches to more than 150,000 people, young and old. A part only of to-morrow's church work is outlined in the notices below.

Peter hinsel." But far up the strath our horses were ohanged at a little clachan. Then here and there, where cotpaths turned to the heights above or the valley beneath, peasant doctrinaries one by one descended and dis-appeared with a departing shot of scriptural brocity, harder and fiercer than all the granite crags above us. The shadows crept in and were marshaled in dark phajanzes in the strath-bed far down there, thousands of feet below. The river, now broad and glassy, now a forming torrent, and again a feathery waterfall, only disclosed its course in sound. Hints of great hunting lodges, like cattles, were revealed by ghostly tur-rets sharply cut against the leaden sky above the darkening trees, or by tremendous gates before great avenues of syca-mores, or by liveried servitors standing at the rondside to catch the mail pouches flung to them as we rattled by. And finally, five little fixxen heads, apparition-like, bobbing beside the coach, and crowing and shouting to the "pappy" beside me, told me we were the heart of grand Strathglass; and that the great square pile behind the larches, from which the welcoming lamp and fire light shone, was the sweet old Manse of F snakyle, where, or a little, a Yankee pilgrim was to find a hospitable Highland EDGAR L. Since the Tuberculosus Congress decided that consumption is due to the presence of the tubercle bacillu- the pneumatic cabinet treat-ment among all progressive and wideawake physicians. The success I have had with this method of treatment during the past three years is simply marvelous. There are scores of people walking the streets of Pittsburg to-day who owe their lives to it, and will cheerfully testify to the fact. Many of them never swal-lowed a moutiful of medicine during the whole course of treatment, which makes their re-covery stilf morte marvelous. By the cabinet treatment antiseptic or germ-destroying sprays "just as good as the lvory." covery still more marvelous. By the calmet treatment antiseptic or germ-destroying sprays are brought into direct contact with the lung tissue, cleansing and applying medicine im-mediately to the diseased parts. The treat-ments are not at all unpleasant or hurtful to the weakest patients. I often put my little daughter in the cabinet to strongthen and de-velop her lungs, as she has had pneumonia twice. On account of the great cost of the cabinet ($500), and time consumed in treatment, from one-half to one hour, i charge $1 for each in-halation, or $5 per weak for daily inhalations, which are often becessary in very bad cases. I have the only cabinet and fully equipped in-halarium in the city.

CATARRH TREATMENT $5 A MONTH.

CATARRH TREATMENT $5 A MONTH. I continue to treat catarrh by the Besaler spray method and the aplication and ad-ministration of such medicines as each case indicates, for $5 a month. Bear this fact in mind, catarrh can only be thoroughly eradi-cated by combined local and internal treat-ment, and those trying any other course are simply wasting their time and money and jeopardizing their health and even lives. For out-of-town patients I have devised a system of home treatment, combining both local and in-ternal medication. Write for symptom blank, DR. BYERS, office and inhalarium 421 Penn ave. Pittsburg.
