IFROM & STAFF CORRESPONDENT. 1 WASHINGTON, October 19 .- Nothing more torcibly illustrates the growth of the National Capital than the increasing life which it exhibits during the "dull season." That period, sometimes long and sometimes short, which got its name years ago when the intervals between sessions of Congress was a dull season indeed. It is but a very few years since the leading hotels used to close their doors and dismiss their help very speedily after the adjournment of Congress. Now such an act would be suicidal. With all their increase of numbers, every one remains in full blast, with a full corps of servants, the register always showing a fair lively than when Congress is here and the influx of visitors at its climax.

Let Congress be in session or out of it, every day has its big arrival of visitors and almost every day its excursion, which sends almost every day its excursion, which sends its squads of curiosity-seers tramping about the public buildings under the Intelage of voluble gaides and fill carriages, cabs and the hig six-in-haud tally-hos for drives about the matchless stretets and avenues to Arling-ton, the Soldiers' Home, "Gien Echo," the already famous log palace hotel, and to Cabin John Bridge. To New Yorkers and Pittsburgers, accustomed to the roar of traffic, Washington may seem dull at any time, for the crowd merely beat upon sight-seeing and social énjoyment is a noiseless one by comparison, but there is no suggestion of dullness to us who are sufficiently in touch with the ebb and dow of the vast population which in terb and vanish, only to give place for other thorsands, always a changeful, sug-pestive, wondrous erowd to the student, il-lustrating infallibly the peculiar character-istics of town, city or section, so that any serious and experienced observer will at once "locate" a commany of visitors ucerly by their appearance, gait and accent. So don't call us dull any longer, please, eren in the dullesi of seasons, for I assure you that even at that time no other city of America turnishes such tempting, constant and varied opportunities for a serious student of humanity. Struck Gas Instead of Oil. its squads of curiosity-seers tramping about that even at that time no other city of America !urnishes such tempting, constant and varied opportunities for a serious student of humanity.

A Man With a History.

And how full of buried as well as of conspicuous reminiscences it is! For instance, I ran to earth the other day a man now well along in middle age, a reserved, retiring along in moule sge, a reserved, terring gentleman of studious leisure, who was nearer to the innermost center of administration affairs during the war, though be-hind the curtain and little known to the public, than almost any other man now living. He knew practically all that the President and great War Minister knew, and knows more of the details of the great tragedy of that time, and can come closer to lesignating the last resting place of the most dramatic of assassins-but I must not anticipate, for I have a "story" sketched from his mouth. He is very averse to being made notorious in any way, and has no desire to write his memoirs, and so the world will get only what such as I may drag from

Struck Gas Instead of Oil. MONTOUR RUN-The Enlow Oil Company, operating on Monrtour run, struck a fair gas well on the McMinn farm yesterday. The well was bored in the hope of getting oil, but the was bored in the hope or getting oil, but the company is disposed to regard a gasser as con-siderable consolation under the circumstances. Mr. James McNall does not express much con-fidence that the gas strike will amount to much, but he says that since the McCurdy well has shown the existence of the 100-foot sand in that section there are lots of chances for explication

Looking at a portrait of Hamilton Fish the other day with another scribbler, my friend told me a little story about the old ex-Secretary which was not bad. One of Fish's constituents was so persistent in de-manding a consular appointment that the old gentleman finally got him appointed consul to Jerusalem. The constituent was furious at being assigned to such a place, indulged in tirade about it costing more to get there than he would get in his salary for

WASHINGTON, October 19 .- Assistant Secretary Bussey has decided the case of Mollie H., widow of John M. Rich, deceased, late of Company D, Independent

No oil or gas yet, and unless they a basis therefor that during his military a basis therefor that during his military service at Falmouth, Va., about De-cember 1, 1862, he contracted disease of the spine and kidneys. It is shown that the soldier, who had become deaf and a raving maniac, died in the insame asylum in Shelby county, Tenn., August 31, 1886, of the results of said troubles or brain disease. That the dis-ubility was pensionable there seems to be no ability was pensionable there seems to be no doubt.

It appears from the testimony that the soldier was married some time after he returned from the army, and lived with his wife until some time in 1871, when she left whe until some time in 18/1, when she left him. Afterward the couple lived together for some months, when she again left him.-It is shown that for some time he traveled about the country until 1877, when he was again married. In the meantime he had written to his friends that he had obtained a divorce. His first wife, believing that he had done so, married a second time, and the children are living the result of this mar-

"Indeed, sir, I would have been glad to oblige you, and I even hinted to the President that I would like to have you sent there, but I regret to say that the United States have not yet entered into diplomatic relations with that country."

The Corcoran Art School.

Let me say, with all respect and admiration for other schools in America, that the Corcoran School of Fine Art, only about a year old, the building erected and the school endowed by the inte W. W. Corcoran, has already gained a popularity under its emi-neat director which is bringing applications for admission from all parts of the country. The tuition is free. Admission depends alone on the merit of work sub-mitted. The applicant's identity is unknown to the committee until after the decision in regard to the work submitted is made. The school is already overflowing with pupils, and among them several of great promise.

The director, Mr. E. F. Andrews, is well known in Pittsburg society. He was a la-vored student under the great Ludwig Knanss, and, I think, the only private pu-pil ever received by that wonderful painter children. After that he painted for some time as a student, or rather more as compan-ion of Chialava. He has just returned from his annual trip to Europe, where he had a delightful visit with Chialava, Tony Robert-Fleury and other Parisian artists. Aside rom his arduous work at the Corcorat School, he has now on an easel in his beau-titul studio a life-size portrait of Senator Voorhees, which promises to be a great work of art, as well as a remarkably spirited and expressive likeness.

A Statue of McClellan.

It may not be known that the Government employs a sculptor of some note as chief modeler for the supervising architect's office, to make designs for statues and other decoration and ornamentation of the Gov-ernment buildings. H. J. Ellicott, the chief modeler, is the artist of a number of statues and soldiers' monuments through-out the country, and his Government studio is a great curiosity shop. Just now its chief attraction is a plaster model of an equestrian statute of General McClellan, accepted by the McClellan Association, and to be reproduced in bronze 11/2 times larger than life, and placed in front of the municipal building in Philadelphia. The pose is splendid, the scene being supposed to be the battle of Antietam, and the horse being modeled directly from the horse which the General bestrode under fire. It is a highly successful work, of which not only the triends of McClellan but every lover of art should be proud.
