escape criticism from lifelong frequents she set his fordship safely down upon his THAT EWING TRIA fashionable ing room. However, the assurance given by the wealth of the father, and the aggression and self-confidence inherited from the mother, went far to cover up the crudity of mere country experience. As for Mrs. Clincher, she was equal to every occasion, and met all comers, even some who would have indulged in sly sarcasm at her expense, with easy kindliness, while the Hon. Jehu, well fed, crammed ull of pride of property, said little, looked wise, and so made no great blunder. Miss Clincher had the honor of a first dance with Lord Lockham, while Miss Valeria Clincher was mated with Count Liston, and so they were literally whirled into the innermest circle. During the whole of this wild first night, the girls were surrounded by diplomats, army and navy young men, and others who assume to be the cream of Washington male society; and other young ladies who had been accus-Washington male society; tomed to attract the best of the beaux were furious with jealousy, The Hon, Jebu Clincher accepted all the apparent homage or the mob simply as his due. He had no other idea than that money made the man. Years before when he had employed a private tutor for his elder daughter, whose early schooling had been nothing more than that of a little hoyden running about in rags and dirt, he had made a yet samous reply to the teacher when the latter informed the indulgent father that the girl had "no capacity." "Well, confound it, man, can't you buy her one?" was the repty that has passed into

The assurance given by the conscious power of riches, which had developed the girl without capacity into a strongly self-reliant young woman, had also transformed the shrinking farmer into a complacent and almost dictatorial citizen who owned so much of the land and humanity of his county as to enable him to do as he pleased. Filled with this spirit the Hon. Jehu made no question of the means by which the sudwas different. They were aware of the small esteem in which ordinary Congressmen are u-ually held by the people who make up the "court circle," and were astounded at their reception.

"However did you do it, mamma?" exclaimed both the girls when they and Mrs. Clincher entered their chamber in the small "Why, my dears, it is but a deserved recognition o worth and beauty," said Mrs.

Tabitha Clincher.
"Well," said the girls doubtfully, "that frank, and natural, and so unfailingly cheerful, that they seemed to bring health and good teeling in their train. They kept themselves exclusively or the most ex-clusive carcle. They wasted no energy on any who were not of the very upper crust of the social pastry. Through the connivance of Mrs. Secretary Simpson they even dined en amille with the President, an incident which was reported at great length in all the home papers and which resulted in a breaking in upon their musing, "you have worship of the Hon. However, nobody paid such assiduous court to Miss Clincher and Miss Valeria as Lord Lockham and Count Liston, both of whom had inherited impoverished estates at home and were forced to accept posts in the diplomatic service of their Government to earn an honest livelihood. Not only were they attracted by the millions of the father, but in nearly as great a degree by the fresh beauty and genial natures of the daughters, whose simple minds, suspicious of foreigners, and especially of foreign diplomats, suitors well at buy, determined they should not be made a mere means of amusement or these adepts in the art of flattery and flirtation. While the young were much attracted toward these replly tascinating fag ends of a small nobility, all protestations of regard were so cautiously received that it is not improbable youthrul Lord and Count would have

A great "paper hunt" was on. This was the fashionable substitute for fox chasing, and had been only that season introduced by Lord Lockham. Representive Clincher had bought for the use of his daughters two of the finest thoroughbred hunters to be had for money, and the young ladies who began their equestrianship when they were wont to bestride the farm horses of their childhood with bare feet and legs were perfectly at home in the saddles.

They sat their hunters magnificently. If they had rivals in the drawing room they certainly were peerless in the saddle; and as Lord Lockham and Count Liston were admitted to be the most graceful and daring of the gentlemen riders, the Misses Clincher and the two diplomats were naturally attructed to each other in the cross country

On this day Lord Lockham was the "fox." He was riding a new hunter which was restive, and from whose eves a rather too victous fire flashed. A gayly decorated bag swung at my lord's side, in which were the bright-colored bits of paper which were to be strewed along the way to mark the trail "lox." At every movement of this bag the hunter would rear and snort, and when Lockham gave him the word he shot away like an arrow from its bow. After a lapse of a few minutes the "bounds," which were comprised of the very elect of the season's society, were given the word, and started in hot pursuit. More than a score of elegantly costumed, splendidly mounted ladies and gentlemen put spurs to their thoroughbreus. The ground trembled and the polse of their feet was like thunder. They kept well together up to a little beyond the place where the "fox" had disappeared from view, and ther the scent was momentarily lost. There was scurrying to and fro until one or the "hounds" was heard to 'give tongue" that the trail was discovered, and the scattered riders again thundered on, riding close, until again the trail disap-peared. Whether it be true as has been whispered at times, that Lord Lockham had given Miss Clincher a "tip" in regard to his course, does not appear in the annals o that social year, but certain it is that a ter keeping well with the, pack" for a while, this young lady gave rein to her horse and soon left all the others far behind. On she rode up hill and down dale, jumping ditches and fences, plunging through Rock creek regardless o its depth, and never loosening ner rein until she caught sight of the "lox," galloping through a by-road within a mile the house of the Racket Club, where it was agreed the hunt should end.

Giving her borse a moment of relaxatio while crossing a freshly plowed field, Miss Clincher emerged into the road. Then giving him the word she bore down upon his dship with the speed of the wind. Knowing he would be overtaken, and doubtless rishing to be, the "tox" made no attempt to escape the lovely "hound" but cantered along easily. As Miss Clincher came with-in a ew rods of him at a tremendons stride, his lordship surned his head and lifted his can. Momentarily off his guard, his treacherous horse reared straight in the air, balancing exactly on the tips o' his hoo s, and striking wickedly with his fore feet. Caught napping, his lordship involuntarily grasped he rein with both hands, and the wrench decided the horse to full backward instead of settling down naturally. At the vital moment when it appeared the animal was about to sall upon and crush the rider, Miss Clincher swept alongside. Dazed with fright she unconsciously reached orth her right arm, which was unengaged. She alt it close tight shout the waist of the falling lord. She gathered him close to her. His weight resting partly upon her arm and partly upon her horse, was easily austained until with a word she calmed the impetuous speed of the animal, and then

"By Jove, you have the strength and Lock bravery of an Amazon," cried Lord Lock-ham, his voice trembling and his legs shaking so that he could hardly stand. "Oh, I did not think what I was doing," faltered Miss Clincher, blushing rosy red.
"It seemed to me you were about to be killed, and I caught hold of you without stopping to reason. Maybe you would not have been hurt at all."

"No, I wouldn't have been burt. I would merely have broken my neck. Miss Clincher, it's no use to minee matters; I have been thinking of it for a long time. I would have said it anyway if I could have ever gathered enough courage. You have saved my life. It therefore belongs to you. It is hardly worth having, but will you take

There was silence for a moment, and then Miss Clincher said: "Please don't say any-thing to the others about it-I mean my dragging you from your saddle. They would think you offered yourself to me simply because of a fortunate accident; and, moreover, I'd rather they wouldn't know I am so strong as to swing you about like that," she concluded, blushing anew. With a gay laugh his lordship caught Miss Clincher's hand and covered it with

The other riders began to come up, the accident was explained, but the blushes which yet suffused the cheeks of Miss Clincher were cause for many roguish and suspicious glances. It was clear that all would not accept the assertion that Lord Lockham had been violently unborsed, and to this day it is quietly whispered in the "best society" that his lordship's borse ran away while he was standing before Miss Clincher and proposing to her.

However this may be, the season ended with a double marriage at the mansion of the Clinchers. Count Listen could wait no longer when he heard o Lockham's engagement, and Miss Valeria, though she was den and brilliant entrance into society was accomplished. With the young ladies it estate did not include a medieval castle, accepted with charming grace. Mrs. Tabitha Clincher treated the marriage of the two raw country girls, her daughters, to members of noble families, as the most natural thing in the world, and the Hon. Jehu Clincher, having learned the condition of the estates of his sons-in-law, vowed he would abandon statesmanship, go abroad and redeem these heritages of ancient tamilies from mort-gages and barrenness, restore Lord Lockham's ruined manor house and Count Lis-ton's chateau, and make the abandoned land blossom like the rose.

It was after the honeymoon. Lady Lock-ham and the Countess Liston had returned the Clinchers on "society" appeared to strengtheo. The young wives sat late at night in their mother's chamber, whose windows looked out over the sleeping village of Millville.

There was a period of silence as all thought of the wondrous change in their lives that had been wrought since they were last together in that chamber.
"Mamma," said Lady Lockham, at last

"Did what, Lady Lockham," said Mrs. Tabitha Clincher, with merriment shining from her eyes. "Why, you kow, I mean how you got us all into the swell society and married us all to lords and counts. It's like a fairy tale." "Yes, you must tell us, mamms, I'm sure there's some secret about it," chimed in the Countess Liston.

"Well," said Mrs. Tabitha Clincher,

Church Censured. SUNDAY SERVICES IN THE CHURCHES

The question of greatest interest in astical circles of Western Pennsylvania the past week has been the right to marry a deceased wife's sister. Two o Pittsburg's foremost United Presbyterian pastors have been condemned by the Synod of that church, at is session in Greensburg, by a vote of nearly 3 to 1. The ministers who are under the bin of the church are Drs. W. J. Reid and R. B. Ewing, the latter for marrying his deceased wile's sister, and the former for officiating at the marriage. Both are guilty of violating a law of the church which has been considered obsolute for a generation or more, but has never been repealed. No two men have stood higher in United Presbyterian circles for the past score of years than Drs. Reid and Ewing. Both are men of acknowledged ability and high character. Aught cannot be said against either as to high Christian integrity and scholarship. But their action on the marriage question has brought both into conflict with an antiquated church rule, which has no loundation in reason, common sense or Scripture.

THE ONLY SPECIALISTS

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

The cases of catarrh and dyspepsia treated and cared by the physicians of the Catarrh and Dyspepsia Institute at 337 Penn avenue are usually those of the most advanced stages, and who have spent years of time and in many instances vast some of money treating with doctors and receiving no benefit until by some friend, or to reading the papers, they learn of the Catarrh and Dyspepsia Institute, and that others have been cared of diseases similar to their own.

Have you been reading the cures that have been published in your daily paper for the past two years? Have you called on these patients, whose address is aiways given, to satisfy yourself that these people readly have been cured whose testimonials have been published from day to day? If not, do so, Investigate what these physicians are capable of doing, and then call on them and they will frankly tell you what they can do for you.

Do you know why they invite snarp criticism on their work? It is because they know what diseases they can cure, and have no other way to absolutely prove their success than by referring you to the hundreds whom they have cured. Remember, these physicians are the only specialists in Pittsburg in the true sense of the term for the treatment and care of catarrh and dyspepsia.

They have received an endless amount of the term for the treatment and cure of catarrh and dyspepsia.

They have received an endless amount of opposition from doctors, who are jealous of the immense practice they have acquired during the past two years. However, they have located in Pittsburg for life, and will continue to treat the diseases of their specialty. The crowds of intelligent people who daily assemble at the parlors of this medical institution also prove the reputation of its physicians in curing disease.
