

STANLEY'S ATTITUDE

Against English Army Officers Accounts in Part for the Major Barttelot Trouble.

REVELATIONS BY STEPHEN FISKE.

How the Explorer Fell Madly in Love With an Actress Just After His Return From Africa.

COUNTERFEITED BY TOM OCHILTREE.

Why the London Times Gets So Much News About the Arab Column Controversy.

SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.

NEW YORK, November 15.—"Of course, I have left my card upon Stanley," said Mr. Stephen Fiske, pushing the papers across the table, in one of the gorgeously decorated reception rooms at the Manhattan Club to-day.

HE WAS USED TO FIGHTING.

"He seemed to me like a man who had seen hard times, and fought through them, and trusted nobody. He talked little, and appeared to be more interested in an Arab horse, which he was commissioned to purchase for Mr. Bennett, than in his correspondence. He and Colonel Anderson would discuss how they were to get the horse safely to London, while I was wondering how he could get his letters through.

NOT A SOCIABLE MAN.

"Stanley was never companionable. At that time, and until long after, politeness and he were total strangers. He was so completely engrossed in his work that he cared for nothing else, and he despised the amenities which make up what the English call a gentleman. The officers made his stay in camp as uncomfortable as possible.

They could not understand this rough diamond, and Stanley grew to hate them for what he called their arrogant pretensions. "These early experiences with British officers throw some light upon the story of the Arab column," Major Barttelot understood Stanley, and Stanley cordially disliked the Major. I do not mean that they were jealous of each other. The feeling was deeper than that. Those of our fighting volunteers who were brought in contact with subordinate officers of the regular army, during the war, will comprehend the situation. Major Barttelot wanted to have a good time, win promotion, and make a name for himself as an African explorer. Stanley, his reputation already made, wanted to find Emin Pasha and get back to England. The two men could not work together. Their differences were inevitable.

"HIS FIRST MESSAGE DOUBTED. "But, to return to Abyssinia. When Stanley sent the news of the first battle, Colonel Anderson took it to the Foreign Office, in London, to verify it and obtain further details. The Foreign Office officials knew nothing of any battle, and received Stanley's news with open incredulity. Yes, they had heard such rumors before. O dear, no; they got no information. It would be impossible, don't you see, to get news in advance of the Government dispatches. Colonel Anderson was so annoyed at this receipt that he brought back the copy of Stanley's news, which he had intended to leave with the British officials.

"His cablegram was called back to the London papers the next day. Then the Foreign Office sent for him; but very few persons believed it. The papers printed a number of communications from more or less eminent scientists and philosophers, demonstrating mathematically that Livingstone had been dead for several years; that, if alive, he was certainly in an entirely different part of Africa; and that, dead or alive, it was physically impossible that such an inexperienced explorer as Stanley could have discovered him. The discussion was very learned, one-sided and conclusive.

"TOM OCHILTREE AS STANLEY. "Only a few nights before his arrival in London, we had a Bohemian dinner, at a restaurant in Soho, and, by way of a joke, as Stanley was very black, and Tom Ochiltree very red-headed, there could not have been two men more unlike—I introduced Ochiltree to the party as Stanley. My speech was received in a low voice, but every ear in the restaurant was stretched to hear that magic name. Ochiltree instantly assumed to be Stanley, and his response was more eloquent than anything Stanley ever said, and brought tears even to the eyes of those of us who knew him to be humbugging.

"Before he had concluded the news had spread in whispers from the restaurant to the street, and a cheering crowd assembled and demanded that Ochiltree should show himself at the window. When we left the restaurant, the crowd was so packed that we could not be called, and we were driven off at a snail's pace, Ochiltree bowing, right and left, like a royal personage.

STANLEY'S RETURN TO LONDON. "I found Stanley, on a Saturday afternoon, in his room near Portland Place. He was in his shirt sleeves, packing his luggage. A little negro boy sat about and grinned. Stanley welcomed me like a long-lost brother. I related the Ochiltree joke. He smiled at it rather grimly, until I reminded him that it proved his popularity, and meant success for his book and his lectures. "Good! That's so!" he exclaimed, and then promptly offered to put his entire lecture tour in my hands, if I would undertake to manage it. Unfortunately, that was impossible.

"You notice that Stanley's interview about the Arab column was with the London Times reporter, and that all his diaries and notes relating to that matter have been turned over to the Times. This is because he believes that the Times was the first English paper to do him justice. It is not so; but he believes it. The Telegraph would have paid him handsomely for what the Times gets for nothing. The News would have been a much better medium for him. But for the sake of old times he prefers the Times, and makes that slow paper appear actually enterprising.

"IN LOVE WITH AN ACTRESS. "I took Stanley to the Vaudeville Theatre one night, when the burlesque was being played. Nellie Powers was the hero, dressed in a white satin suit and a white wig, with her face powdered. Stanley stared at her, and gazed and gazed. Her white dress dazzled him. I would not give all I am worth to speak to that—'angel' he said, gripping my arm like a vise.

"An introduction to the business manager placed the entire theater at Stanley's disposal. He went behind the scenes and he was presented to his white angel. He simply glared at her. His eyes seemed aflame. After that was a strange contrast—the white and the black. But the impression upon Nellie Powers was not very favorable. He frightened her, and she was glad when her cue came and she had to go on the stage. Stanley, like an idiot, attempted to follow her, and I had to hold him back. When he looked at me and found me laughing at him, he gave a tremendous gasp and said: 'Let's get out of this.'

"TAKING IN BOHEMIA. "I felt much relieved when we had left the theater. Too much darkness Africa had transformed a London burlesque actress into an angel. Accompanying Stanley to the Albion and other Bohemian resorts that night, I learned what it was to be a headliner. He was as ignorant of the conventionalities as a child, and as obstinate as a mule, and the only way to control him at all was to refer to some incident of our former comradeship. Then he would relax and begin to talk by the hour.

"After that night I left Stanley to his book, his lectures and his fame. Since then he has learned the properties, the conventionalities and the amenities; has become one of the world's greatest men, and has married one of the most charming women in England. Yet, when Anderson, hazed, and myself summon him for our friendly crack, I feel sure that I shall meet the same old Stanley."

COMMISSION'S ULTIMATUM.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE DEMANDS AN AMENDMENT

To the World's Fair Site Ordinance, Failing Which They May Refuse to Accept the Various Park Sites Offered by the City Authorities.

CHICAGO, November 15.—The Executive Committee of the World's Fair National Commission today decided preliminary action in the matter of apportioning the various exhibit halls among the various parks constituting the site. Uncertainty as to the extent to which Washington Park would be used, has some time past constituted one of the main difficulties of the situation, involving indirectly the lake front problem. Several schemes of grouping in Washington Park the bulk of the buildings have been objected to by the South Park Commissioners as involving too great a displacement to the existing landscape improvements.

"This afternoon the subject was brought to a climax at a lengthy meeting of the National Commission's Executive Committee, held behind closed doors. The action of the committee is embodied in the following resolutions adopted on motion of Judge Martindale, of Indiana:

"The Executive Committee, on behalf of the National Commission, respectfully, earnestly and unanimously insist that the Local Directory obtain from the South Park Commission without delay, but before the meeting on the 18th, an amendment to their ordinance extending the use of Washington Park for the holding of the Exposition, making the same unconditional, that unless such action be taken by the South Park Board, we will feel constrained to recommend to the Commission the reconsideration and amendment of the resolutions adopted by the Commission, accepting the various sites heretofore tendered to it.

Lowest Prices for the Best!

That's our maxim. We have everything to gain by selling on a small margin of profit. We could not fill our large business block with the very best goods at lowest prices if we did not have our well-known gigantic outlet; and we wouldn't have this gigantic outlet if we didn't give the public the full benefit of our peerless facilities. That's plain.

By the way! Have you visited our Overcoat Department this season? Have you seen the scores—yes, scores of stout tables loaded high with the choicest and most desirable garments? You'll find such celebrated materials here as Carr's Meltons, Treble-milled Kerseys, Sedan Montagnacs, Irish Friezes, Pomeroy's, Schnabel Bros., West of Englands, Elysian Fur Beavers, etc. They are cut according to the very latest prevailing styles. Some raw-edged and strapped seams, some double-breasted, others single-breasted, with fly fronts. In some the collars are overlaid with silk velvet, the outer edge matching the laid—on straps over the seams. The favorite cut is full back, short length, Cassimere or Worsted, body linings and satin sleeve lining.

IN SUITS, too, we have a vast range of styles. There are Sacks and Frocks (single and double-breasted) in Cheviots, Cassimeres, Worsteds, Diagonals, Corkscrews, etc., and in every imaginable pattern, design and shade.

Facts That Speak Volumes.

Our Cloak Department, though but three years old, has outstripped and outdistanced every one of its older rivals. And this, despite of the claim of the drygoods houses that "Ladies will not go to a clothing store to buy cloaks." If the Ladies ever entertained this prejudice (which we doubt) it certainly has faded away before our superior inducements. It takes forty salesmen and salesladies (more than are employed by any other house in Western Pennsylvania) to attend to our great and growing cloak trade, and at the head of them all stands a man who KNOWS HIS BUSINESS—Mr. W. L. Griffith, formerly with Messrs. Boggs and Buhl. But we want to tell you something of the many good things to be found here this week:

Ladies' Cheviot Reefer Jackets, with French Seal shawl collar and facing, and four crocheted loops, at only $12 98. Imported Cheviot and Diagonal Cloth Jackets, with deep shawl collar and wide facing of genuine Astrakhan, at $18. Capes—Over 150 different styles. Black Fur Capes, lined with heavy satin, at $4, $5 and $7 50. Fashionable Black Fur Capes, with deep shawl collar of Astrakhan, at $9. The very popular Black Astrakhan Capes at $6 98, $10, $12 50, $15 and up to $25. Wool Seal Capes at $16 50. Russian Seal Capes at $15. Beaver Capes, from $20 to $40. Persian Capes from $30 to $45. Genuine Alaska Seal Capes, London Dye, from $40 to $70. Seal Capes, with marten collars, from $50 to $75. And (the remark is not amiss here) ours is the only house in this vicinity that has not yet advanced the prices of seals.

YOUNG AMERICA!

Big Boys and Little Boys—Stout Boys and Lean Boys—Good Boys and Bad Boys! We can fit 'em all, and, as a matter of fact, old half of them in the two cities. At no previous season, however, were our preparations as complete, our stock as large, our bargains as great as during this Fall and Winter.

We hardly think there's a single pretty or stylish Kilt, Short or Long-Pant Suit, or a Juvenile Overcoat of modern make that you can't find in our stock. But its our (very high) qualities and (very low) prices that are chiefly responsible for our big, booming trade. During this week, in particular, we shall offer a most remarkable array of attractions in Boys' and Children's fine Suits and Overcoats. Careful Mothers, it'll pay you to look into this.

We still have about 100 of those fine All-wool $3 98 Combination Suits, with which we give GRATIS Extra Pants and Hats to match.

A few more of those Fish Horns left—as long as they'll last we'll present one with every Boy's Suit or Overcoat.
