cards, not a sound was to be heard. Strange, It was a kind of tunnel, or covered passage, that there is something in suspense which affects the mind more strongly than the actual danger. These men had volunteered ithout a space of hesitation, to face the risk of death. Yet, not one of them could now look on without a tingling of the blood, as they waited for the card to fall which carried a man's life!

Such was their absorption, that they did not see two faces which came suddenly peeping in upon them through the window

The girls on the veranda had been startled by hearing all at once the sound of voices in he room close by them. From their position they could not avoid overhearing every word that passed. They heard the short speech in which Vane announced to the men the danger which threatened the well and the duty which was expected of them; they heard his appeal for volunteers and then the cheer which followed. So far they had remained motioniers, eagerly drinking in the details of the proposed adventure but when Vane took out the pack of eards in order to select a man by lot, to listen, without seeing, was impossible—and in a minute the two faces came peeping in at the ndow, in the manner just described.

From this position they could see clearly every card as it was dealt. The cards fell slowly, one by one, before each man in turn. The deal went round-card by card, as it appeared, the focus of nine pairs of eager res. The second deal went round-no Knave of Spades as yet appeared. The tourth began; would that complete the circuit of the seven? The pack was growing thin, and expectation deepened now with every card. Where was the Knave of Spaces? It must come soon! Again the cards went round.

No! Not quite. As the last card fell face unward on the table, a thrill went through the nerves of the spectators. The two girls at the window shrank back suddenly as if they had been shot. There was the fatal card at last! The lot had fallen to Vane himself.

The young man laughed lightly as he threw down the pack. "That decides it," he said, "I go first. You will meet me at the archway in half an hour from this time; it then will be dusk, and we will give ourselves what chance we can. I shall go out alone; the rest of you will wait under cover of the archway and ill rush out the moment they fire at me. If I sail, two or you must bring me in-Sanderson and King can do it. The other tour must try to get a bucketful of water there will be time for that I think though it will be sharp work. Remember, archway, with all ready, in half an hour,"

HL

The men saluted and filed out. Vane was left alone. He turned, and was about to seat himself at the table, when, to his surprise, he saw a figure standing in the window of the room. He looked again-and saw that it was Lenora. What could have brought her there he knew not; the truth he did not cuess. Wondering, he took a step or two in her direction, and was about to burriedly torward and stood beside him. "St. George," she said, "you must not go

-you shall not go. Tell me you will not; promise me. As she spoke, he thought, for the first time, of the veranda; she knew what he was going to do. He would much rather that she had not known; but he answered simply: "It is my duty, Lenors."

Duty!" she repeated with impatience. "Oh, yes-but do not go! Send someone else; surely there are plenty of men. Do not go, St. George." She laid her hand the young man's arm and looked up treat is the power of beauty-though it be the heauty of Delilah. It could not make a man like Vane forgetful of his duty, or shake for more than a moment his natural resolution. But as he looked down at the lavely lips which tempted him, he did not turn at once away. And yet her words fore a slend jarred on him. He felt no surprise; he softly out. new Lenora well; but he would have chosen that the girl to whom he gave his love. though she might part from him in agony or mind, would not have had him shirk his dearer to her than life, but honor should be dearer than either,

He was on the point of speaking, when there appeared at the window of the room another figure. They both looked up, and awit. It was Mary Sulland. Her face was very pale, and as she came forward a ever might have seen that she was trembling. But her eyes shone with a strange light, and when she spoke, her tinctness. Her first words showed that she had not overheard, or had not understood, what had already passed between Lenora and St. George.

"We know where you are going," she "Lenora shall not said, with shining eyes. be alone in bidding you Godspeed before you go. I have come to do so, too;" and, as she spoke, she looked as a Spartan maiden may have looked, when she sent her lover forth to death or glery,
At the first sound of her voice, Vane

storted. Their eyes met, and one might have thought that some reflection of the ight in hers had flashed into his own. Witness a word he took her hand and pressed it to his lips. Then with the same nction of farewell to Lenors, he turned away reached the door of the apartment. The whole scene was over almost in a mo

Lenora, with a half-hysterical laugh, turned to the window and went out. Mary Sulland was left alone. Suddenly she sank upon a chair, and burst into such a passion of tears as shook her very frame. It is not in the nature of any woman, however nobly made, however jealous of the honor of the man whom she regards, not to feel at such a moment a cruel agony of mind. She was alone. The excitement which had sustained her was already over and now the hard, plain fact, without disguise, pressed itself remorselessly upon her Her here had gone forth to almost certain death. Her here?—Yes—he was her here. She made no secret of it now, in her own heart. She loved him well, Gradly would she have given her own life for his. But alas!

her eyes. She started to her feet, pale, eagereved and trembling-trembling now with new excitement. She seemed like one possessed by a spirit stronger than her own-by an impulse overmastering and resistless. For a moment of two she stood motionless, For a moment or two she stood motionless, ber ever gleaming. Then turning, not to the window, but to the door, she hurried I see you guess it. Yes, relief has come. She went straight to her own chamber.

In a few minutes she came out again. She was now draped in a long, close, gray dressing gown, which completely covered her own dress. Her tall, slight figure, thus parmented, looked like nothing so much as a gray ghost-and like a ghost in the falling ight of evening she glided out of her chamand passed along the passages, and down a flight of stairs.
All at once she stopped. Some noise her plan. Presently, all being still, she stand? again stole forward. The men were, for the most part, busy at their posts about the fortifications, and the part of the station through which she had to pass was almost deserted. Fortune favored her, besides; no Eve observed her, as she stole upon her way.

At last, to her infinite relief, she reached her destination. She stood in the archway which led out into the square.

It was still empty. Vane's volunteers had gone in the search of the article refor the adventure, and had not vet arrived. The open court was before her; and there, in the middle of it was the well.

She knew the archway well—its image had been clear to her mind's eye all along.

"No," he said, smiling, "I shall not have to go again. Nor, what is of much greater consequence, will you, Mary."

She answered with a smile. They under-She knew the archway well—its image bad been clear to her mind's eye all along.

length. Near the outer end of the archway there was a buttress, and beyond it a recess or deep niche in the masonry. The niche was close beside the buttress, on the side toward the square. The gray figure reached the buttressglided into the recess-and disappeared.

Five minutes passed-ten minutes. Then the sound of steps was heard, and men entered the archway in a body. Vane was not among them; but immediately afterward he appeared, together with another officer-the surgeon. By this time the sun had sunk, and but for the rising moon it would have been quite dark. As it was, the interior of the archway was in gloom; but the open square outside was bathed in light-a light uncertain, shadowy, spectral, yet permitting any object moving in it to be distinctly seen. The woodwork which had supported the windless of the wall had been shattered by the shot, and now stood in ruins; but the chain remained intact, its end twisted round a broken stump, and the bucket hung in salety inside the opening of the well. No time was lost. Vane spoke a word or two, by way of last directions to the men; then taking a bucket in his hand, so that, if by any chance he escaped the shot, he might do his share in bringing in the water, he turned toward the square. That his chance was very slight beknew. And as he turned to go forth into the range of the cannon, his face, though resolute, was grave. He had already taken a step or two in advance, when he suddenly stopped short.

What was that? A soit, gray, ghostly
bim, and flitted forth into the open air. Before he had recovered from his amazement, it had already reached the well. For the space of an instant it stood, there, motion-less; then, as if desiring rather to attract attention than to shun it, it raised both arms above its head and waved them in the moonlight. In a moment—just as Vane, recovering a little, started out of the archway the cannon thundered; a storm of shot whistled in the air, plowed up the ground, and rattled among the ruined woodwork of the well.

Vane was still outside of its range, and no shot struck him. But the phantom figure -what of it? He looked; and thrilled. What dark thing was that, which now lay motionless beside the mouth of the well? He had not seen the figure fall-but it was down upon the ground!

VI.

When the night was past; when the next day shone; when the dial-finger marked the hour a little after noon, the garrison of Sunda Gunge was shaken suddenly by strange excitement. First, there became audible a noise of wild confusion in the encampment of the Sepoys round the walls. It grew-it gathered volume; it swelled into a tumult. Guns fired; voices yelled; a sound or two in her direction, and was about to ask her what she wished, when she came able teet. Then, drowning every other sound, arose the loud hurrahing of English voices; and this, taken up by those inside the garrison, became in a few minutes a per-fect tempest of wild cheering, ringing far

Suddenly - unexpectedly - relief had come. The rebels were flying in all direc-tions; their camp was in the hands of English soldiers. The siege of Sunda Gunge was over. It is not our purpose to dwell upon the scene that followed. From that tumult of wild joy, of almost fierce excitement, we must turn away, and follow St. George

As soon as the fact of the relief was certain, he stepped out of the crowd, and made his way, alone and unperceived, along the deserted passages, to a certain room which lay in the rear of the walled buildings. It was the very room from which the night be-fore a slender, gray-draped figure had stolen

Just as he reached the door, and was hesitating at the threshold, Mrs. Jessop, who had been called out by the noise of the cheering, was seen returning in a state of duty in the face of danger. Love might be much excitement. Vane accosted her eagerly, but in low tones.

Can I see her yet?" he asked.
"She is much better: she is dressed and sitting up. But the noise alarmed her. does not know the cause of it. Will you come in and tell her?"

Vane followed her into the room. In large chair, next the window, looking very white and weak, with a bandage round her temples, where the shot had grazed and stunned her, sat Mary Sulland. As Vane entered she looked round. He paused, and for some seconds the two regarded each

He had not seen her since, the night before, he had carried her, swooning, to her room. He had heard, with infinite retief, that the wound was not serious; and inquir-ing hourly at the door throughout the night, he had learned that the swoon was passing off, and that with some hours of rest there would be little to be feared. Yet now, as he stood before her, even the great event which had just happened was less present to his mind than anxiety to satisfy himself, with his own eyes, that she was safe. The shock which he had felt at the moment when he had raised her in his arms, and caught was with him still. He had felt at that instant a certainty that she was killed. And indeed she had had a wonderful escape.

Every sportsman who has tried his gun at a sheet of blank paper knows that it will sometimes happen that, while the paper will be spotted thick with pellets, there will sometimes be a space left free of shot large enough, perhaps, to have let the game escape, however true the aim. It had so happened here. Amid the storm of shot only one had grazed her; the rest had whistled past her without harm. But where her slender figure had so parrowly escaped, a man, being of larger bulk, would inevitably have been struck down. Mary Sulland had, in fact, been slightly wounded, where Vane would have been killed.

During the hours of night, while he had wandered up and down outside her door, too restless to seek for sleep, he had thought of all these things. He had thought of the girl who had risked her life for his; he had let his memory go back into the past, and call to mind all that he had owed to Mary Sulland through the years that he had known her; how all his noblest aspirations, dreams, ambitions, had come from her, or what could she do?

All at once a wild thought struck her.

Her cheek flamed; the old light kindled in her eyes. She started to her feet, pale, eagerwhat she had been to him. And now, as he stood beside her, as he looked at her again he wondered more and more.

The look of inquiry on her face recalled him to himself. The siege is over.

She looked at him with eagerness. One thought filled her mind-it lorced a passage to her lips.

"Then you will not have to go again for As the words escaped her she flushed red.

Her action of the night before had hardly been her own—so overmastering had been the impulse which had hurried her away. And now, like a woman, sae was troubled All at once she stopped. And now she was alraid— a raid, not of what she was about to do, but of being seen, and thwarted in the execution to being seen, and thwarted in the execution to be the stopped. As for others they knew nothing. Except that she had been slightly hurt by a stray piece of shot, no one, not even the Colonel or Lenora, knew the truth. The men who had been at the archway had only the vaguest idea of what had passed. The secret was their own.

WHALES IN THE AIR.

metimes the Big Sea Monsters Leap 20 Feet Above the Water. Youth's Companion.

Captain Basil Hall describes a whale 50 or 60 feet in length as leaping out of the water for the fun of the thing. "So complete was this enormous feat,"says he, "that for an instant we saw him fairly up in the air, in a horizontal position, at a distance of at least 20 perpendicular feet over our heads. During his progress upward, there was in his spring some touch of the vivacity with which a trout or a salmon shoots out of the water; but he fell back again on the sea like a huge log thrown on its broadside, and with such a thundering crash as made all hands stare in astonishment, and the bold-

"Total demolition, indeed, must have been the fate of our party, had the whale taken his leap one minute sooner, for he would then have fallen plump on the boat, waves caused by the explosion spread over half the anchorage; if the ship herself had blown up the effect could not have extended much farther."

Captain Hall wrote to Mr. Scoresby, one of the highest authorities in these matters, relating the fact. The reply was: "I have much pleasure in being able to attest that such high leaps are not infrequent. While engaged in the northern wnale fishery, I witnessed many similar exploits of whales of 40 or 50 feet in length, forgetting their usual gravity, and making these odd ex-hibitions of their whole form from head to tail. Certainly I have several times seen whales leap so high out of the water as to be ompletely in air." Darwin, in his "Journal of Researches."

remarks: "One day off the east coast of Terra del Fuego we saw a grand sight in several spermaceti whales jumping quite upright out of the water, with the exception o heir tail-fins; as they fell down sideways, they splashed the water high up, and the sound reverberated like a distant broadside.

AS TO THANKSGIVING.

The Reasons for a Spirit of Gratitude to the Great Giver.

LYMAN ABBOTT ON CRUCIFIXION. What Pittsburg and Allegheny Preachers

GLEANINGS FROM CHURCH FIELDS

Will Discuss.

Thanksgiving comes next Thursday. It is within the memory of the writer when this holiday was confined to New England. President Lincoln was the first to make the festival of Thanksgiving national. Before his day it was local. Now the States which do not recognize the day are in the minority in number, and much more so in population. It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and the fact that public sentiment has compelled a national holiday of thanksgiving is one of the health ul signs of the times. Among the reasons for thanksgiving the following are suggested: First-Health. Without this there is no real blessing within our reach. If digestion, nerves and muscles are working orderly, do ing their appointed work then we have the very best reasons to give thanks to the Giver of every good and perfect gift. Second—Home. If that word brings up any pleasant associations there are reasons for a true thanksgiving. A happy home life is certainly among the very best of our earthly enjoyments. A good home, where peace and love abound is among the highest of earthly blessings; and if this is ours let us praise God from whom all bless-Third—Country. Let us be thankful that we are Americans. "Breathes there a man with soul so dead who to himself hath not said this is my own, my native land." The man or woman who can claim American birth has abundant ground for a true thanksgiving. Many hard things are said by representatives of parties concerning corruption of politics, but, after all we live in the greatest country under the sun, and let

Sunday School Lesson.

"The Crucifixion" is the subject for to-morrow's study in the Sunday schools of America and Britain. Lyman Abbott, editor of the Christian Union and paster of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, had this to say on the cruufixion in an Easter sermon last spring:

give thanks. For health, home and nativity, Americans may give thanks to the Church, Brooklyn, had this to say on the crucifixion in an Easter sermon last spring:

Gerome's picture of the crucifixion represents the soldiery and the chief priests returning to the city, and only the shadows of the cross are seen upon the ground. I seek tonight not to paint the cracifixion, but simply to point you to the shadows which it casts. Velasquez represents the crucifixion of Jesus in the hour of death. The head has fallen forward, and the long hair fallen over the face veils the features from our sight. So I seek to represent our dying Lord. I would not, if I could, paint His anguish or His torture; I look upon Him velled, remembering the love that crucified film; for He gave up His own life for love's sake, I would not, if I could, leave the picture of a dark and damnable tragedy in your minds or in your hearts; I would have you this coming week remember that for us and our salvation He died; that still from His cross there goes this prayer: "Father, forgive them;" that still from this cross there goes out to us this breathing of sympathy and helpfulness which went from him to his more than crucified mother; that still from this in our darkest hour of loneliness and sorrow there goes the fellowship of one who has known also what it is to think himself alone, as it were, forsaken by God; that still for us there goes in the hour of our own keenest anguish, and when we stand face to face, the triumphant cry "It is finished;" and then still the prayer is put into our own lips, "Into thy hands, O Father, I commit my spirit." Victor over sin, victor over death, not slain by it, but slaying it, so I would remember Him, and have you remember Him, this passion week.

Mr. John T. Good, who lives at No. 129 Mineteenth street, Southside, is a window glass blower, employed in the Cunningham Window Glass Co., Limited, on Twentythird street. In a recent interview with the writer Mr. Good told the following story of his own experience:

"For about four years," says Mr. Good, "ever since I recovered from an attack of diphtheria, I had suffered almost constantly from catarrh. My head and nose would stop up. I had a continuous dull pain over my eyes and a rumbling, roaring noise in my ears. My eyes were weak and watery. I could feel the mucous dropping back into my throat and was always hawking and raising to clear it. My throat would fill up at night and I would wake up gasping for breath, as if I were choking to death. My throat was raw and inflamed.

> Mr. John T. Good, 129 Nineteenth Street, South side, Pittsburg, Pa. "As my trouble grew worse, sharp pains like the stab of a knife would take me in the chest. Palpitation of the heart set in. My appette failed. The little I ate caused me digtress and nausea at my stomach. My nights were restless. I would get up in the morning more tired than when I went to bed. A short time ago, after reading so much of Drs. Copeland & Blair and their wonderful success in cases similar to mine, I called on them, and finding their charges so very low I decided to begin their treatment at once.

Prof. Wm. H. Ashe, mine, I called the them, and intume their charges so very low I decided to begin their treatment at once.

"I never made a better resolution," concluded Mr. Good, "for they have really done wonders for me. My symptoms all rapidly disappeared, and to-day I am like a different man entirely."

Drs. Copeland & Blair have their own laboratory and their own pharmacist, whose whole time is devoted to preparing the medicines for their many patients. Every prescription is compounded under the direct supervision of the doctors themselves, which accounts to a certain extent for the invariable positive results of their treatment. To each and every patient under their care Drs. Copeland & Blair furnish all medicines tree of charge.

Drs. Copeland & Blair are responsible to you for what they represent, and are at all times prepared to uphold their every assertion. They court honest, sincere investigation, have no secrets and are only too glad to show all interested and candid people what they are doing for suffering humanity. FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, W. F.
