al times. At last I was put down, the bandage was quietly removed, and I found myself squatted on a stone floor between Soondatch and Woun-Tajac, who, with howed heads and faces partly shrouded in their white robes, squatted like statues of Ruddha, their knees and shins flat to the heels, their eyes deflected, and a look of deyout reverence and abstracted medi-tation in their countenances. The light was dim to my unaccustomed eves, but all around, as far as I could see, were white-robed worshipers crouched in the same attitude of silent reverence. By degrees, as my eyes grew used to the dim gloom, I began to look about me. The place was a square vault, so lofty that I could not see the ceiling, and I should say not less than a hundred paces long and wide. All around the sides rose gigantic columns, carved into images of Buddha always, yet with a thousand variations from the original plan, a thousand freaks of fancy, a thousand otesquesies, through which shone, the effectively for the departures, the eternal calm, the staguant, imperturbed ecstacy of apathy of Buddha's remarkable face, with the great pendant cars and the eves looking out beyond you into the supreme wistlessness of Nieban-a face once seen never forgotten.

By degrees I came to see the plan of this long and deep-drawn sigh. evidently subterranean vault, and to look with wonder upon the simple grandeur of its massive architecture, which was severely plain, except so far as the carving of the eat columns went. At the furthest end of he hall, resting against the columns, was a raised dais or platform, covered with red cloth. This stage was raised between three and four feet above the floor of the vault, and was about 35 or 40 teet deep and 150 broad. Behind it a curtain of red cloth hung down from the capitals of the towering olumns. In front of the stage, just about he spot where the pulpit of the orchestra in a Greek theater would be, was a tripod-shaped altar, with a broad censer upon it, in which was burn-ing a scented oil, mixed with gums and aromatic woods, that diffused through the whole vault a pungent, sacramental

Suddenly there was a wild and startling erash of barbaric music from under the stage-googs, drums, cymbals and hornsand with wonderful alertness and a really scribable effect a band of naked men came out from behind the curtains, bearing wh a scented torch in his hand, climbed he columns with the agility of monkeys, nd lighted each a bundred lamps, strung rom the base almost of the columns sheer up to the neex of the wanlt, which I could now see rose in a lofty dome that oubtiess pierced far, up into the interior of the pageda proper, the appearance of which outside I have decribed. The illumination from these multiodioous lamps was very bright and brilbut, too soft to be dazzling or overpowering, yet so penetrating and pervasive that one nitised nothing of the perfect light of in day. I could distinctly trace the ascending and diminishing rays of the cupola above us, and the rows of brickwork, only binly whitewashed, that supported it.

The din of the horrible orchestra in reated, and a band of old women came out train under the stage singing (or rather shricking out) the most diabolical chaut that I ever heard. The red curtain flutered a little, there was a dull thud, and there, right before us, alongside the censer, stood a very old man, but wrinkled, with ong hair and beard white as cot-on flowce. His finger-nails were ton florce. His finger-nails were several inches long and his sunken we were horribly diversified with two long th, vellow and ogreish. He was naked, seemed a great bundle of naukeen, taken out. Tepada and Norodom commenced to or a breech clout, and his shrunken cles showe with oil. He took the censer unwind this wrapping, which was very tight. Yard after yard was unwound and ands and blew his breath into it until thame rose 20 feet high, red and furious; ith a sudden jerking motion, he ed the hurning oil toward the crowd of raiting spectators. It shot toward them a ad sheet of terrible flame-it descended them a shower of roses and japonicas, or than could have been rathered in a Turning the censer bottom upward, soun it for a minute upon the point of his toumb null, then flung it disdainfully away toward the audience. It struck the payesee, with a metallic clang, bounced, and see, with audden expanse of wings, a of wine, and a censer burning with setting eagle, frightened horribly, flight toward the summit of the The old man gazed a moment upward, then, setzing the tripod upon which e censer had stood, be bent its legs apart with a nervous hand, straightened them anst his knee, and hurled them, darthe, toward the eagle. They glanced upvord with a gilded flash, and instantly the espie came fluttering down in our midst, dead, and three horrible cobras coiled around him and lifting their hooded heads defaulty, and flashing anger out of their glittering eyes. The music shricked still ilder, the snukes coiled and plaited them. sives together in a rhythmic dance, lifting the dead eacle upon their heads, and prestol right in our midst stood the tripod again, with its flickering flame and its inceasesavored breath, A more perfect illusion never was seen. "That is Norodom," whispered Woun-Tajac in my ear. Another actor now came upon the scene whom I recognized to be the all athlete, Tepada, Behind him came a man, whose name, Woun-Tajac inormed me, was Minhman, and a boy, probur began some of the most wonderful e exhibitions that can be conceived it impossible to believe, unless you see it. at work these men put human muscles n. I am not going to provoke the inity of my readers by attempting to escribe the majority of them. At last aboving alightly, Tepada drew in his arms Il the old man's white beard touched his le; there was a sudden strain, and the nrms of the men from being horizontal beune perpendicular, Norodom's head resting stop of Tepada's, Minhman's head upon verodom's teet, and Tain-ki's head poin Minhuan's feet. A pause for reath, then the column of men was propelled into the air, and presto!-Tepada's head was on the ground, Minhman's feet upon Norodom's head, Tsin-ki's feet upon Munhman's head. Each had turned a somersault, and the column was unbroken. I could fill columns with descriptions of most unaccountable and remarkable feats of magic performed by these wonderini neglers, but 1 must retrain. One trick mich Minhman performed was a very sufor version of the mango tree feat of the Indian juggiers. He took an orange, cut it open, and produced a serpent. This he took down into the audience, and, borrowing a robe from some one, cut the snake's head oil and covered it with the robe. When the rube was lifted again a fox was in place of the snake. The fox's head was ent off, two robes borrowed and when they were raised there was n woll, which was killed with the sword. Three robes and a leopard appeared; t was slain with a javelin. Four covered a most savage-looking buffalo, that was hilled with an ax. Five robes covered in part, but not altogether, a lordly eleahant, who, when the sword was pointed against him, seized Minhman by the neck and tossed him violently up. He mounted teet foremost, and finally clung by his toes to the capital of one of the columns. Tenada now leaped from the stage and alighted upon the elephant's shoulders. With a ort sword he goaded the beast on the head antil, shricking, the unwieldy animal reared you its hind teet, twined its trunk about and of the great columns, and seemed rying to list itself from the ground and wrap its body round the great pillar. The music clashed out bar-barously, Norodom flashed forth a dazzling barvasie, Norodom flashed forth a darrling firework of some sort, and the elephant had disappeared and Tepada lay upon the stage writhing in the folds of a great boa con-some pungent incense. Norodom took from his hair a little box of unguent, and prying open the mouth of the mummy with a cold-chisel, showed that the dry tongue could rattle like a chip against the dry fauces. He filled the month with unguent and closed it, and anointed the eyelids, nos-trils and ears. Then he and Tepada mixed the wine and oil, and carefully rubbed every part of the body with it. Then, laying it down in a reclining position, they put the burning censer upon the chest and withdrew a pace, while the drums and gongs and cymbals crashed and clattered, and the shrill, crackling treble of the chorus of old women rose hideously. A breathless pause ensued-one, two three minutes-and the mummy sneezed, sneezed thrice, so violently as to extinguish the flame of the censer. A moment later the thing sat up, and stared, blinking and vacant, out around the vault-an old, old, wrinkled man, with mumbling chops, a shriveled breast and belly, and little tufts of white hair upon his chin and forehead. Tepada approached him reverently upon his knees, bringing a salver, with wine and a wafer-The old man did not notice him, but cake. ate, drank, then tottered to his feet, the feeblest, decrepid old dotard that ever walked. In another moment he saw the Nautch girl slumbering upon her couch; he scuffled feebly to her, and, mumbling, stooped as it to help his dim eyes to see her better. With a glad cry the maiden awoke, clasped him in her arms and to her breast, and kissed him. Incomprehensible magic! He was no longer a nonagenarian dotard, but a full-veined, fiery youth, who gave her kiss for kiss. How the transformation was wrought I have no idea, but there it was before our very eyes. The music grew soft and passionate, the chorus of the old women came out, and with strange Phallic songs and dances bore the two away-a bridal pair. I never expect again to behold a sight so wonderful as that whole transformation, which, I may mention, my P. M. learned Jesuit friend, to whom I described it, regards as a piece of pure symbolism. His explanation is too long and too learned to quote, but he connects this ceremony with the world-old myth of Venus and Adonis, and claims that it is all a torm of sun-worship. The show went on for some time longer with many curious feats. At the end of an hour the Phallic procession returned, but this time the Bayadere led it, a strange tridmph in her eyes, while the youth lay upon the couch sleeping. The Phallic chorus sank into a dirge, the youth faded visibly; he was again the shivering dotard; he sighed, then breathed no more. Luan-Prabana retired sorrowfully; Norodom and Tepada wrapped the corpse again in its interminable shrouds, restored it to the coffin, scaled it carefully, and it was borne away again. The attendants climbed up to and extinguished the lights. I was blindfolded and borne away again. I found myself once more at the doorway of the temple, in the bright sunshine, with my friends-and the mystic ceremonies of the great temple of Juthia was over, it may be for many years .- Journal of Medics Psy

BLAMED ON THE MAILS.

Dr. King Says He Sent a Letter to the Bureau of Health.

Dr. William D. King, who was charged with failing to report a case of diphtheria to the Bureau of Health at the proper time, was given a hearing before Alderman Gripp yesterday afternoon. The suit was entered against the doctor by Superintendent Baker, of the Bureau of Health, who claimed that King had failed to report the case until death occurred. At the hearing yesterday Dr. King claimed, to the best of his recollection and cording to the testimony of his office boy, that he sent in his report of the case by mail on a Saturday afternoon, the day his at-tention was called to the case, and that if his report was delayed by the mails until the following Tuesday he was not responsible. Alderman Gripp reserved his decisio in the case until next Tuesday.
