bles for some 9,000 ghests, and giving a cup (like Mr.George Washington Childs), a cup of solid gold, to every one of them to take away. But the "city of the lilies" was lost, nevertheless; and the time came when peo-ple walken over the place where men had feasted, and ruled, and made money and builded palaces-and wondered where the town had stood!

But we have found Susa. At least, this the husband of his wife); and here is the story of discovery and pictures of all the strange sights and people of Persia, and all about it. And in such a bright, scrappy, antique archology, to be delightfully inter-esting. Really a readable book of disesting. covery1

But what remains to be said about Europe? All intelligent people, upon re-turning from a three months' journey there, attend was a dismal failure, so time, natural immediately proceed to write a book-so it sometimes seems. And what can we say more? But it is personality which is in-more? But it is personality which is in-teresting, more interesting than all the Aips from the Tyrol to Alaska. If the Aips from the Tyrol to Alaska. If the personality, looks at the personality of t can describe it, then let us read. Really, there are just as many different Europes as there are different tourists. Mary Elizabeth Blake made her visit last summer. She saw some-thing of Ireland, France, Switzerland, and ndon. And everywhere she saw sights which Baedeker never dreamed of. At Berne, for example, she is attracted by the universality of the bear, and especially by that particularly sweet bear, constructed of white sugar, which with tongue of reddest peppermint, dashes voraciously across a field of chocolate. In Paris she notices the com-fortable aprons of the children. In London, she makes a pilgrimage to Chelsea to see where Carlyle lived, and visits Toynbee Hall. A bright, clever, clear-sighted woman who knows what to see and what to say, has written this entertaining book. Mr. Wilson's papers saw light first in Scribner's Magazine. They are put together here in a form which makes them into one of the most attractively bound books of this Within and without "In Scripture Lauds" is a pleasure to the eve and the hand. And everybody who reads Scribner's Wilson has well arranged the records of his journey so that the book runs aloog in chronological order with the scripture nar-rative, beginning with the lands of Moses and ending with the country of St. Paul's couvergion. The nitrone the probate of the Mill, and she will context the instrument. Communion Wine. Alfred Speer, of Passaic, N. J., preserve the unfermented juice of the graps for conversion. The pictures, from photo-graphs, are the very best collection in reach of the ordinary reader. The descriptions are part geography, and part commentary. The writer evidently carried with him camera and a Bible, and the result of the combination is both attractive and useful. At the end of the book is an alphabetical On which the scenes are described. One looks back again over the pictures. They are most excellent, worth taking a good, long look at, every one of them. No book quite like this has appeared in these recent days of advance in illustration. The pictures, too, are the state of th feature of the "Pacific Coast Scenic Tour" another book whose look is pleasant to all people who love a well-bound book. The four runs along the coast from San Diego up to Sitka. The author is enthusiastic.
