STREET CARS COLLIDE.

A Pleasant Valley Coach Telescopes a Penn Avenue Car-Many Passengers Slightly Injured-One Man Receives Several Gashes in the Face From Broken Glass.

Shortly before 1 o'clock yesterday a Pleasant Valley electric car almost telescoped a Citizens' Traction ceach at Penn avenue and Seventh street. Both cars were full of pas-sengers, but, for a wonder, no one was killed, although a number received slight injuries, and a colored man was badly cut. Where the blame belongs is not known. Car No. 121, of the Pleasant Valley line, was coming up Seventh street at a high rate o sneed and struck Citizens' Traction car No. 201 at the Penn avenue crossing. Passengers in both coaches were thrown into a promisenous heap, and the sir was filled with the screams of women and children. Nearly everyope received some slight scratches and bruises. Broken glass flow everywhere and one colored man received several deep gashes on his face. He was hurried out of the car and taken to a doctor's office before his name could be learned. The other passengers were then taken out, more frightened than hurt.

The whole side of the traction car was knocked in, and there was hardly a pane of class left on the other side. The Pleasant Valley car was finally hauled back, and it was sound that the front of the car had been stove in by the force of the collision. The instorman's cabin was a wreck.

A crowd of at least 1,000 people collected almost instantly, and as usual the crowd retarded the work of clearing up the wreck. Travel was delayed on both lines for about an hour, and almost every car on the Citizens' Traction lius was piled up in one long procession, extending up from Seventh street. While the men worked on the wreck the crowd swore, for most of them were people auxious to reach home and a Christman could be made on the present signal system, anything that would save life. Mrs Aldrich was in communication with all of the leading detectives of the country, and here is one of the letters which she re-ceived from W. A. Pinkerton, of Chicago, Captain Irvin, station master of the same line, said that a flag system might be devised that would lessen the dangers at grade while trying to bring the guilty parties to crossings, but he didn't think the lighting justice:

of them made any special difference, as peo-ple were killed as often in the full blaze of sunlight as in the dark on such crossings. W. D. Vincent, Division Chief Operator Mrs. Mertle C, Aldrich, Box 290, Windsor, Ont. : of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, re-marked that he could see no life saving object to be accomplished, and asked if it was not notorious that more people were killed on crossings in daylight than at night. your friend at Windsor who first wrote me in

A railroader present suggested that elec-tric lighting would be a good thing in a tog, but was otherwise of no consequence except to make working more comfortable.

It seems more than likely that the subject has been discussed, as there would be manifest advantages in such a move, providing the cost were not too great. A man who be-lieves the matter is contemplated states that the mortality at night is certainly greater than in daylight at crossings, considering the relative number of people abroad night and day. There is one thing in favor, viz.: That after the lines were run enough of the immense motive power employed on rail-ways could be spared to produce the electricity, and the subsequent cost of lighting up a vast scope of territory would be small.

ROBERT WATCHORN RESIGNS

cretary of the United Miners Compelle by Ill Health to Retire.

Secretary Robert Watchorn, of the United Mine Workers of America, has surprised the membership of his organization by resigning his position. In a lengthy letter to President Rae, which the latter received on Wednesday, Mr. Watchorn states as a reason for resigning that his health will not permit him to fill the position longer, and he desires to be relieved. Continuing, Mr. Watchorn

In severing my official connection with our craft's organization I am naturally pained, and not less so in officially leaving you. You were unexpectedly called to the helm in the crisis of a struggle which threatened to terminate only in the complete overthrow of the very citadel of every safeguard connected with the union. Your advent into official life was unostenta-tious and manify. Your every act, so far as I know, has been firm and equitable, and I need scarcely say that I have found my co-opera-tions with you most concental, happy, and in no small degree successful. The rivalry of past years has been rooted out, and to-day we stand as a trades union, stronger and greater in the history of the craft's organized movement. President Rae wrote yesterday to Secre-tary Watchorn, asking him not to insist upon giving up the office now. The annual convention will be held on the second Tuesday in February, and a special election could not be held to fill the vacancy, and if Watchorn should be relieved now the office would fall on the President.
