Not long after this be was invited by Uncle Sol to visit his country residence, and as it was in the season of golden fruit and yellow leaves, he accepted. He remained over night, and in the evening he had what he called the honor of playing checkers with the best lady player in the Commonwander from the game to his tair opponent, and such moves as 11-15, 22-18, 8-11 were of Forest returned to Boston more than ever

The spacious Ellwood mansion was brightly illuminated. The gas jets threw their rays out upon the pure white snow, and the gorgeous drawing room was filled with a merry throng. It was the occasion of Kate's 21st birthday, and a few friends had been invited by Kate and her father, the latter's invitations being directed to his own riends, those whom he knew could tell a losing move when he saw it; while those of Kate's inviting consisted of her old school-mates, and, of course, Hinkley Eveleth was counted as one of them.

Mr. Hinkley Evelein had established a good practice, and was now looked upon as a rising young lawyer, as indeed he was. Whatever had been said of him at college, for his deposit of the college or his deportment since his admission to the bar had been most exemplary.

When they left the piano and leisurely promenaded through the rooms they were pronounced by all the best-looking couple in the assembly. Kate, with her tall and well-developed form and graceful movements, Hinkley, tall and straight, with his hair brushed carelessly back from an intel-lectual forehead, won the admiration of

He knew too well how to plead a cause, even in love, and she listened and nervously picked the shell-like petals of a wax begonia, and the broken blossoms fell at her feet. But where was Forest Worthington? He bad received a most cordial invitation from both Kate and her father, and intended to have come, but a sudden illness of his sis-ter had kept him away. When Kate and Hinkley returned from the conservatory Hinkley looked smiling and confident, but Kate's countenance wore a sad expression. They found the company engaged in various amusements. Major Domino, a white-haired veteran of the late war, was seated at one table surrounded by a half dozen middle-aged ladies, whom he seemed to please very much by his witty sallies. Those who wished to relieve the monotony of call-ing him Major Domino, called him Domino Major. He was an expert at dominos. The wit and repartee of the talkative Major furnished abundant amusement for several elderly ladies, whose power of intellect was only equalled by the depth of the game.

Then there was Judge Eveleth deeply immersed in the wonderful mysteries of a game of chess with his friend Dr. Appleton. All games void or chance met the lavor of Solomon Eilwood; a card had never been

After playing five games, three of which were won by Hinkley and two resulted in draws, the old gentleman complained of a headache and gave up his seat to Dr. Morrison, the village physician, who was un-

Uncle Sol knew that Hinkley had been devoting much time of late to the study of draughts, but was surprised at his pro-after receiving an approving nod from her father, she reluctantly seated herself, and choosing the black men made the inceptive move 11 to 15. Hinkley formed the "eross,"

Uncle Sol undged Domino Major, who happened to be standing next to him, and pointed to the hal move, as much as to say, "That move has much skriftenees," and Major Domino, who knew not a losing from a winning move, nodded and looked wise, and nudged his next neighbor, who happened to be a phicgmatic sid lady of 60 winters. Kate pointed her jeweled finger at 14, but sile windered its if it had been blitten.

All congratulated Kate on her play, and Uncle Sol threw back his shoulders, strided back and forth, seemingly proud of his daughter's achievement. He was the hap-piest man in the room. Hinkley received his first de eat of the evening with perfect ang froid, and the company dispersed.

Two months after the birthday party

Uncle Sol was scated in his private room enveloped in a cloud of smoke. During his entire manhood he had been an inveterate smoker, and many were the fortunates pecu-lations which had conduced to replenish the firm's exchequer which had been conceived partly by means of the pipe. But Solomon Ellwood now wrestled with a problem of more importance to him, because of importance to his child, than that of any stock or foreign speculation. And that problem wis as to who should be his son-in-law. Hinkley Eveleth had pleaded his cause with such earnestness that Kate knew not how to answer, and in a thoughtless moment had hinted that her father's wishes were to be considered; and Hinkley, in his impetuosity, mistook this to be a permit to ask her father's consent, which he did. He informed the old centleman that, although Kate had not in so many words promised to be his wife, yet he had reason to believe that one word from him would settle the matter, and make him the happiest of mordaughter that morning to observe a blush upon her cheek when he mentioned the name of Forest Worthington. He had given his promise to Hinkley in good faith to intercede for him. A promise was a sacred matter with him; and how to extricate himself from the dilemma in which he found himself, was the cause, the result of "Forest is a fine young man," mused the merchant, "Poor, but what or that? ambitious and honest. But, consarn it! there is my promise," and he struck at the smoke my promise," and he struck at the smoke furiously, as though it were an enemy, and began to pace the floor. Suddenly he stopped as though struck by an original idea, and, putting his finger to his nose and squinting one eye, he looked straight at the ceiling for full half a minute. "By Jupiter! and the rest of the great planets, why not?" and he rushed out into the conservatory where he knew he should find Kate, still ejaculating "Why not?" "Kate, my dear," said he, "did you ever read of the knights of old who won their lady loves by some feat of horsemanship, or other wonderful athletic skill?"

"Oh, yes!" said Kate, "I have often read of such instances, and often imagined," she continued laughing, "how exceedingly ro-mantic and delightful it would be were I to ously.

"Would you object to being won by mental instead of physical skill?" asked her father.
A light broke upon Kate's mind, and she trembled. She had beaten Hinkley once, but she had never beaten Forest, was her first thought. She turned to her father, and placing her band in his, said: "You have my youthful

HINKLEY EVELETH,

Each now began to prepare for the coming struggle. They were visitors upon an equal footing at the Ellwood Mansion, and each learned by more familiar acquaintance that the other, though a rival, was to be esteemed and respected as a gentleman. A portion of each day was set apart for the study of checkers, and every available work, however ancient, was utilized. Occasional visits were made by each to New York, Chicago, Philadelphia or Portland, for the secret purpose of consulting Yates, Heffner, Freeman, Reed and Broughton. The pupil set of the Barker, Brothers was increased by list of the Barker Brothers was increased by two, and they took their instruction at their respective hotels.

October 15 was the day upon which the great match was to be contested, and like all past dates came, it came at last. Kate's lady friends declared it was just "charming," and that they would be won in just such a way.

At precisely 2 P. M. the folding doors of the parlor were swung wide open in order to accommodate the invited guests. A men, though showing slight symptoms of nervousness, seated themselves for the first time in their lives on opposite sides of a checker board. The referee then said: "Gentlemen, you will play strictly in accordance with Anderson's rules. The match will terminate when one party has won three games. No player shall play the same opening twice until all the possible openings have been played. Do you agree?"

Both bowed. Forest chose the black men and played 12-16, and each clung carefully to the trunk, and a draw was entered. won by an ending that surprised even Uncle Sol, and blanched the cheeks of Kate. It was now getting interesting, and all eyes were turned upon Forest to note the manner in which he took his defeat. A slight paleness was all that was noticeable. now his turn to play the black men, and he moved 11-15, Hinkley at once replied with

The next three games resulted in draws, but in the seventh Forest played 9-13, and at its conclusion another win was entered to the credit of the young lawyer. The succeeding four games were carefully played and were all drawn. It en, as if playing by inspiration, Forest, by wonderful strategy and beautiful combinations, which called forth the applause of all beholders, won the twel th and thirteenth games, and the referee appropriet a recess until 8 o'clock.

Supper for all was served in the large dining room, after which several collected around the board and proceeded to analyze the last ending, which for pure originality and genius had never, in their estimation, been equaled. Again the contestants faced each other for the final trial. Forest looked smilling and Hinkley looked determined. Three more draws were scored, and it was evident that each was playing with the utmost care and skill. Kate, though slightly pale, was a constant observer of each game, and now took a po-sition in the rear of Hinkley's seat. Forest, glancing up, observed her eyes fixed on him with a peculiar meaning. She pursed her lips and formed some word which commenced with a B, and Forest dropped his eyes on the men which were set for the seventeenth game and played 11—16. It then occurred to the observers that he had not before played the Bristol opening. Each move was de liberately made, and this is the game:

11-16 10-14 a 7-10 19-21 23-23 5-30c 14-20 18-15 20-16 31-27 20-23 Black 16-19 14-18 8-12 10-19 22-7d 21-16 21-17 16-115 27-3c 11-2 21-16 21-17 18-21 12-16 4-8 22-18 26-22 27-18 24-15 2-9

NOTES. A.-Hinkley started back at this move, which seemed unexpected to him. Once more Forest raised his even to Kate, and imagined he detected the slightest inclination of her head, which gave him additional courage.

B.-The audience was held spellbound, and at the next move started as though a mistake had been committed.

next move started as though a mistake had been committed.

C---'Are you ill, Katep' suddenly inquired Uncle Sol, springing forward and supporting his daughter. For Kate had fainted the moment Hinkiey's finger had the man on Z. She was carried to an adjoining room, but soon revived sufficiently to return to the room, her eyes glistening with an uncommon scarlet.

D--'Please, will some one give me a drink of water?' said Hinkiey faintly.

E-Hinkiey looked at the board full five minutes, and then after the referce had called "lime!" he continued to gaze at the pieces like one entranced. "Your minute is up, Mr. Eveith, "said the referce, "and by the rule Mr. Worthington wins."

"Yes," said the referce, "and by the rule Mr. "Yes," said the referce, "and by the rule Mr. "Yes," said the referce, "and by the rule Mr. "Yes," said the referce, "and by the rule Mr. "Yes," said the referce, "and by the rule Mr. "Yes," said the referce, "and by the rule Mr. "Yes," said the referce, "and by the rule Mr. "Yes," said the referce, "and by the rule Mr. "Yes," said the referce, "and by the rule Mr. "Yes," said the referce, "and by the rule Mr. "Yes," said the referce, "and by the rule Mr. Worthington wins."

that one word from him would settle the matter, and make him the happiest of mortale.

Uncle Sol liked Hinkley. He had been spoken of as a possible candidate for the next State Legislature, had a good income, and would, in his estimation, make Kate a good husband; so he promised to influence Kate, it she should need influencing in his behalf.

But what, was his surprise one morning when upon entering his office in Boston, to have his bookkeeper close the office door and then in a respectful way declare his passion for his beautiful Kate, and ask his consent to their nuptials. He was taken completely by surprise, and his surprise was augmented when upon consulting his graceful and fascinating Laura was next to wish her dear brother and new-found sister all sorts of good fortune.

Hinkley then requested of Forest a moment's privacy, and they stepped into the recess of a bay window. Hinkley whispered something into Forest's ear. Forest started, and said: "But, my dear fellow, you have not known her more than three months."

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., Jan. 9 .- For the past week there has been great excitement in the town of Boynton, Taxewell county. The place consists of a postoffice, a store and a blacksmith shop. A large frame house, standing about a quarter of a mile from town, which is used as a granary, has been haunted for over a week. At about 7 o'clock in the evening various colored lights would float in the window and awful noises and groans were to be heard. The community was terribly excited and nearly everyone was afraid to venture near the house after dark. It was examined in the daytime and nothing could be discovered. People came for miles to see the exhibition, and large crowds gathered there every night Last Tuesday five young men of Hopedale determined to capture the spook. They were D. S. McQueen, Joe Naeffziger, W. P. Sands, William Waldon and Charles Sands. Accordingly, they went to the place just after dark and examined the ground very carefully. The lower doors and windows were found boarded up. They quietly withdrew and awaited developments. Some time before 7 o'clock they observed six persons approaching the house, and in a short time five went away. In the course of a few utes the panorama began. Immediately the men from Hopedale ran to the house and discharged their revolvers and called for the phantom, or whatever it was, to appear. Immediately after the shots the lights went out and the noises ceased. The five men A few of the boards were knocked off and threatened that they would shoot the first person they saw coming from the building. two of the men entered with dark lanterns and revolvers in their hands, while the others guarded the house to see that no one left it. Their lanterne were flashed about the room and they soon found a young man of Boynton, by the name of Walter Cod-dington, standing in a bin of oats that was referee having been chosen, the two young in the room. SALT LAKE, UTAH, Jan. 9 .- A meeting of the Utah Ore Producers' Association was held for the purpose of electing delegates to the Lead Producers' Convention, to be held in Denver on the 13th inst. Representatives of the leading mining districts of the Territory were present, and W. F. James, L. E. Holden, B. Mackintosh, J. Q. Packard, W. W. Chisholm, W. G. Van Horne and

F. W. Billings were chosen to represent Utah in the convention named. A committee was appointed to draft resolutions favoring free coinage and protection from Mexican lead, to be forwarded to the Nationa! Silver Committee at Washington. The attitude of the smelters' trusts on the proposition was discussed and several of the leading mine operators favored the plan of combining to regulate the ore output as being most likely to bring the smelting companies to time in their unreasonable gradings and prices on ore purchased. CHARLESTON, S. C., Jan. 9 .- Charleston people are now convinced, if they ever doubted it before, that when the people of South Carolina went to the woods to find a Governor, they got a wild and woolly one. A special committee of prominent and wealthy phosphate men, of this city, went to Columbia vesterday by appointment to meet Governor Tillman.
Their object was to obtain some accommodation with regard to new inspection tags on bagged goods for shipment. The new tags are not ready, and a congestion of busi ness is threatened unless some arrangements can be made. Governor Tillman met the committee in his office and in the presence of members of his Cabinet. He greeted the members of the committee stiffly, without removing his hat from his head, and shook ands as though with a broken arm, The spokesman of the committee began to ex-plain the cause of their visit, but was inter-rupted by Governor Tillman, who refused

FRATERNITY AMONG CHRISTIANS.

The Signs of the Times Point to a Union of

All Protestants.

GLEANINGS PROM CHURCH PIELDS

The evidences of growing charity and liberality in the various denominations of the Christian Church are apparent on every hand. Last Sunday two new churches were dedicated in this vicinity, a United Presby terian Church at Wilkinsburg and a Dis ciple Church at Mansfield. At both dedicatory services all the neighboring Protestant ministers participated, adjourning their regular services to take part. These are signs of the times and point to a good time coming when there will be one fold as there is one Shepherd. When ministers of different denominations can come together and worship together o special occasions why can they not come to gether in one great church and move shoul-der to shoulder under the one leader against Community in Abject Terror—One of the Number Entrapped By Ghost Skeptics. when churches argued intensely about their growing year by year, to look at the points of agreement more than at the points of divergence. The Protestant sects grew in the main out of controversy.

Leaders who became dissatisfied with nethods and views of the churches sece and started out on reform and secession ideas. Hence the endless divisions of Protestantism, which are its great weakness to-day. The drift is now toward union and not division, as it was in former days. It may be an over sanguine hope that there will be one Christian church in the near future, but certain it is that the signs of the times point in that direction. The Master prayed in behalf of his followers: "That they all may be one, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me."

A LAWYER'S DOWNFALL

He Disappears From Home, Leaving Debts Amounting to $100,000.

BATH. N. Y., Jan. 9.—Frank M. Conley, BATH, N. Y., Jan. 2.—Frank M. Conley, a leading lawyer of Cohocton, has disappeared. It is believed he has betrayed judiciary trusts and the confidence of friends, and left debts of $100,000. Lawyer Conley has been in the Labit for years of spending three or four days out of each week in Rochester and Buffalo, where he each week in Rochester and Buffalo, where he was believed to have important business interests, which required his close personal attention. He did not return home week before last and nothing has been heard of him since. His fine Cohocton property is heavily mortaged. Creditors are coming in from all points. It is supposed that Coniey patronized the Rochester and Buffalo bucket shops. He has a wife and seven children, who are almost crazed with his sudden and entirely unsuspected downfall.

Chicago Determined to Have the Site Clea for the World's Fair. for the World's Fair.

CHICAGO, Jan. 9.—Chicago will officially "evict" the intruders on the Lake Front February 26, unless they vacate the premises be-fore that time. To-day Mayor Cregier notified the chief officers of the Illinois Central, Baltimore and Ohio and Michigan Central Railmore and Ohio and Michigan Central Railroads, the American Express Company and the Exposition Company that they must remove their respective buildings, tracks and other incumbrances from the city's property on the Lake Front within 60 days from December 29, the date of the vacating ordinance passed by the Council.

"No ejectment proceedings will be necessary
if the companies ignore the order," said Corneration Counsel Hutchinson. "The city will

THE MOVABLE DAM.

Continued from Ninth Page. is due partly to the reservoir influence the channel above the tributary, partly to the damming effect of conflicting currents near the mouth of the tributary, and partly, as at the mouth of Red river, in the flood of 1851, to interference with normal changes in local slope at points below the tributary. The observed fact accords per eetly with the views of planters residing upon the Mississippi below Arkausas and Red rivers, who have trequently stated that they dread the rise of these streams far more than those of the Ohio or of the Missouri."

Quotations from eminent hydraulicians might be multiplied on this point; but these

from the foremost American work on the subject are sufficient to show the opinion of eminent engineers, and to illustrate most forcibly the reservoir effect of the channels in equalizing floods, as demonstrated by actual measurements. Li as shown by the above quotations, 550 square miles of channel have a reservoir el-fect modifying by 400,000 cubic feet per second, or by 25 per cent the greatest known flood discharge, convert the lower part of the river into a simple drain from a lake, and all this moreover when unimproved, un-augmented and undirected by the art and wisdom of man; the question may well be asked, what results will follow extending this action to tens of thousands of square miles of river channels, augmenting and controlling the reservoir action, and operat-ing it with the wisdom gained by wide intelligence and long experience? Verily, the results cannot be questioned. The floods will be controlled, overflows and destruction will cease, the bottom lands will be thoroughly drained, densely peopled and healthy; and the Mississippi and its tributarias will constitute the second control of the second contr taries will constitute a and serviceable system of navigable water-ways, free to all the people.

A GRAVE ROBBED.

But for the Timely Interference of Physicians, the Result Would Have Been Certain.

Singular Experience of Mr. Frank Miller, of This City.

What is more terrible than the thought of being buried alive or being confined to a living death by the affliction of disease? And yet it is necessary to state that we do not value the fortune of good health. How many men have said "my thousands for an hour of life." Ye: it can be obtained for such a trifle if the opportunity is grasped in time. Do not wait until your disease has reached such a stage that this bright world appears to you as a living trouble, and if you could only die and end your terrible suffering you would be content. Take advantage of the advancement made in the present century in the practice of medicine and be cured of the terrible feeling you now have. To make our views plainer let us state the condition of a resident of our city after being a silent sufferer for six years.

Mr. Frank Miller, who lives at No. 28 Picnic street, Pittsburg, in a recent interview with the writer, said: "For over six years I suffered the horrors of chronic catarrh. My entire system became undermined by the disease, every portion of my body seemed effected. I had all the symptoms as you have read them, and in their worst form. I used a creat number of socalled 'sure-cures' and sought the advice and aid of doctor after doctor, but none could help me. Indeed, I grew gradually worse all the time, in spite of all that could be done. I was completely discouraged, and felt that the disease would surely take me to my grave. I was in this condition when I was induced to consult Drs. Copeland & Blair. Although 1 had no hope that they would help me, I did so because I felt that they thoroughly understood my case and their charges being so very reason able. I decided to give them a trial. "It was the best resolution I ever made." concludes Mr. Miller, "for they have cured me.

I began to improve from the start, and my symptoms rapidly disappeared under splendid DRS. COPELAND & BLAIR treat with success PRS.
