Different Ways of Getting Around the Marriage Laws.

A DOUBLE TALE TOLD BY A LOVER,

Who Would Even Commit Perjury to Break Into Matrimony.

HIS PLEASURE STILL IN ANTICIPATION

Marriage license court is a great place for stories of all sorts. There one can find the romance of love and devotion despite the bitter opposition of "fond papas," but occusionally a little "tale of woe" of a different description bobs up, and the unrelenting Captain Heiber turns a deaf ear to all entreaties of love.

On Thursday afternoon a young man entered the office and asked for a license. He progressed well enough with the regular list of questions until he reached the one enquiring if the lady had ever been married before. He replied that she had, but she had been divorced. After some talk he produced a divorce subprena. Captain Heiber informed him that that was not sufficient; he would have to get a copy of the divorce decree. The applicant finally left the office. Yesterday morning Clerk Heiber re-ceived an application for a license which had been sworn to before Alderman Flach. All the questions had been answered and it was set forth that the ludy had not been married before. The names looked familiar and upon investigation Captain Heiber saw they were the same as given by the young man referred to, the preceding evening. The ages, residence, etc., also corresponded. He then told the messenger he would not give the license requested.

In the afternoon the man who desired to wed appeared in company with several friends. He was indignant at the refusal to give him a license and he was taken in hands by Register Conner. When questioned closely about his statement the day be ore, and the difference as to the lady's previous allianes as set forth in the application sworn to before Alderman Flach, he said that it was anothe woman. The first lady, he said, lived in Hazelwood. He was pressed closely, and after a number of questions, he said he last saw her three or four years ago. When he made this answer, Mr. Connor said the names of the two ladies were the same, and he would not become a party to the perjury. The man grew indignant at this, but was sternly informed that he could consider himself lucky if he got out of the Court House without being arrested for perjury.

The applicant set forth in his statement that he and the lady resided in McKeesport. He is about 30 years old, and the lady 28
