Some Wonderful Instruments Made

by Mr. John A. Brashear to SHOW PROMINENCES ON PEŒBUS. Spectroscopes Constructed So Strong as to Compel the

SUN TO HALT FOR HIS PHOTOGRAPH

Much curiosity has been expressed as to the cause of the strong light observed in the Western heavens on the night of the first. A reader of THE DISPATCH at Irondale, O., writes for information regarding it. He says that a few minutes before 10 o'clock on Sunday night be noticed a "comet which looked to be 40 feet long by 2 feet wide, the lower end being hidden by a hill, and located in the Southeast." Other correspondents describe it as a tall pillar of light. Chief Elliott, of the Charities Department, referring to this light, which he saw very distinctly at about 11:30 o'clock, described it as a bar of light, dim at first but gradually becoming more intense, about 25 feet high and a foot wide. For some elucidation of the matter, Mr. John A. Brashear, the astronomist, was called upon vesterday afternoon, and asked if a comet was due to arrive in these parts about the present time.

Hadn't Heard of a New Comet. "Not that I know of," he replied. "We are kept informed on these points, and I do not know of any new star or comet having appeared, or any old comet on its way hither. The light observed on Sunday night may have been a reflection of a gas well, and in my opinion it was only this. Similar reflection ave before been ascribed to movements in heavenly bodies." Mr. Brashear is always a pleasant as well as a most entertaining talker, and the opportunity was taken to hear from him a little of the knowledge of sidereal operations with which knowledge of sidereal operations with which he is so well conversant.

"Anything new from above, Mr. Brashear?"

"Well, the most important recent discovery is by spectrum analysis of double stars beyond the reach of a telescope. The star Beta Auriga has been discovered to be double its companion star, being nearly, 02 of a second from the primary. No telescope yet made is able to discover a double star whose distance is less than 10 of a second, so that the spectroscope has virtually told us of stars whose distance is ten times closer. Not only this, but what is still more wonderful, it reveals to us a motion heretofore unknown among the Stellar worlds.

"The period of revolution of the compani star is less than five days, and, although the star cannot be seen by the telescope, the period of revolution has been computed-as also the mass of the system-with a precision which is absolutely wonderful.

solutely wonderful.
"Another star of the same nature has bee discovered in the handle of the great dipper.
Dr. Vogel, of Pottsdam, in Prussia, has also discovered that the beautiful star Spicae, in the constellation of the Virgin, is also a close double star of the same type as Beta Auriga. These new discoveries have given a great im-nestis to the charming study and already a number of astranomical observatories are being itted up for work of this kind."

in reply as to whether he was engaged on any new instruments Mr. Brashear continued: new instruments Mr. Brashear continued:

"We are just now constructing two very fine spectroscopes, one of which is to be used principally for work of this character. The larger of the two is for Prot. Charles A. Young, the astronomist of Princeton University. It will be, in all probability, when completed, the finest instrument ever made. It will have every attachment for high observations as well as for photographic studies of the stars and their motions, and will possess many improvements over that made for the Lick Observatory several years ago. The instrument will have several years ago. The instrument will have object glasses of triple form made of glass manufactured at Jena, in Prussia, and which is most suitable for the most perfect corrections that can be given to our object glass. It will have a triple set of compound prisms giving a deviation of 160° to the spectrum. This will enable Prof. Young to photograph the spec-trum of the stars with a magnitude never be-re actained in this country. Will Make the Sun Move. The spectroscope is also provided with an apparatus to study the solar prominences and an attachment is placed in front of the spectroscope to rotate the image of the sun in rotating the whole instrument, as has hereto fore been done. Besides the prism the spectrofore been done. Besides the prism the spectroscope will be provided with a 5-inch diffraction grating containing 60,000 lines; that used in the Lick Observatory having but 47,000. This gives a spectrum of exceptional purity and equal to a battery of 30 prisms, could such a hattery be used. There are many accessories to this instrument, among them the electric attachment, by which the spectrum of the metals or gases may be brought into the same field of view with the spectrum of the stars.

In this way the spectrum of the stars can be compared with all the substances we have upon the earth. This instrument will be attached to the great 23-inch equatorial of the Halstead Observatory at Princetod."

"You spoke of another similar instrument, Mr. Brashear!"

"Yes, that is one we have completed for George L. Hale, of Chicago, one of the most promising young astronomists of the day. This instrument, however, is to be used for a photographic study of the solar prominences. Attempts have heretofore been made to photograph the prominences, but with only partial success. Mr. Hale expects to have complete and astronomers interested in that line success, and astronomers interested in that line of research have much confidence in Mr. Hale's ability to do the work.

Continuous Photograph of the Sun. The camera for this photographic work is one of the most delicate pieces of apparatus we have yet made. The film is carried on a roller two inclies in diameter driven by a clepsydra of the most delicate construction. The light enters a most delicate construction. The light enters a minute siit and falls on the film which is slowly rotated in front of it. The telescope is allowed to gently drift across the prominence. If Mr. Hale succeeds in this beautiful work we shall soon be able to have a continuous photograph of solar prominences as we have of solar spots. We are also making for his observatory a 12-inch object glass of the great focal length of 18 feet. His purpose in having it made this way is to get as great an image of the sun as possible without any magnification.

"Prof. R. S. Newell, of Cambridge, England, was here a few weeks ago arranging for the construction of a large spectroscope similar to that at Lick. Dr. Huggins, another eminent English astronomist, has also applied to us for work he requires. We are grinding and polishing a great 16-inch object glass for the Carlton College Observatory at Northfield, Minn., and are now erecting a mounting to test this big are now erecting a mounting to test this big glass. We are also making a 12-inch objec glass for the Brown University in Rhode Island o that you see we have our hands full." Mr Brashear concluded as he prepared to see al snug in his workshops before closing up for the
