August Steiner opposed further discussion, as he wanted to see Mr. Shaw's test achine at work, and then went on to sav that much of the trouble was caused by the want of system. He did not relish the idea of miners being left to the tender mercy o an automatic protector, but wanted ventilances that could be had. Mr. Steine said he had a high opinion of the membership of the Columbus convention, much higher than the numbskull legislators at Harrisburg, and he ranted to see Mr. Shaw's machine get a fair est, and further, Prof. Phillips, of the Western University, had promised to be present and examine it. Mr. Steiner said at if there had not been so much combustible matter in the Dunbar mine the explo sion would not have resulted nearly so disus-trously. He concluded with a blast for Harrisburg demagogues, and wound up in time to allow the members to go to dinner.

WORK OF THE AFTERNOON.

A Session Devoted to Ten-Minute Speecher -Everybody Given a Show-Spirited Debate and a Running Fire Kept Up-A Long Meeting-What Was Said.

When the institute reconvened at 1:30 o'clock Mr. Loutitt proposed that discussion be limited to five-minute speeches, but ten was finally fixed as the limit, though Inspector James Black, of the Seventh district, wanted the session devoted to a discussion between Messre. Shaw and Foster,

Mine Inspector Duncan said that Shaw's testing machine was a success as a gas dector, but he was not enamored by the signal machine. He thought its operation was not practicable, or would not be. He had and that in four months the machine had made no report, and the pipes, he thought, were too far away from the men interested. He urged that proper ventilation and the Dayy safety lamp would accomplish all the matter. He said his instrument weighed and measured more accurately than a drugst's scales, but when Superintendent James Beatty, after five months' trial, indorsed he got the cold shoulder and could scarce

Good Humor Restored by Mr. Weish.

Vice President William Welsh restored od humor by stating that though he did pin his faith to the machine, he would, enough, buy one and take it home It would certainly afford recreaon in the nature of delicate experiments. P. K. Adams, though deprecating per-nalties, wanted to know if Mr. Watchwere a stockholder in the machine, and res comported by Mr. Shaw's statement the (Watchern) hadn't a dollar in it. Mr. Adams scouted the idea that either rators or consumers would make the sacthe necessary to insure safety, and said the at of the system would come off the miners posed the Legislature doing anything

A Reply to Some of the Strictures

Mr. Shaw retaliated by saying that if Legislature found anything hoped it would In reply to some of Mr. Adams' strictures, Mr. Shaw said he did not think it absolutely necessary for him to use a pick or shovel as passport to recognition by workingmen He said he began life on a salary of $1 25 a week, and he didn't seem to think it a disgrace to have worked out of that sphere. James Blick made a sort of semi-friendly He admitted that he had indersed Mr. Shaw's machine once on a time, but he gave notice that he did not propose to in-derse everything Mr. Shaw might invent. Mr. Blick said he became celebrated as soon as he gave his indorsement; every newspaper in the country found it out at once. He argued that it would be impossible to use the signal machine in case of trouble before the miners had been blown to Canaan's happy land, and he then proceeded to shape the final action of the session, which was arrived at after columns of argument. Mr. Blick was not wanting law either, but fire bosses, and te gave Mr. Steiner an opening to fire another snot at "the numbskulls in Harris-

Finally, Mr. Shaw rubbed some people's for the wrong way by talking of the influcace operators were exerting. There were several indignant protests, but Shaw smil-ingly resumed his seat and awaited further developments, while Mr. Evans, of Johnsown, was registering an energetic protest. Mr. Steiner asked why the Columbus deliverance was not given more effect. After he had concluded the meeting began to get down to its pomace. Secretary Seiden offered the following:

The resolution threatened for a time to plunge the meeting into an all-night session, and one after another said they didn't want any automatic appliances which would cause miners more peril by making them

Mr. Steiner said he did not like to see them jumping on Mr. Shaw all the time, Mr. Blick moved to amend by striking out the last part of the resolution.

This gave Mr. Forting the resolution.

This gave Mr. Foster, of Scranton, another copportunity for a fly at Mr. Shaw, and he (Foster) urged that the whole resolution be knocked out, as if part were adopted it might be misconstrueds an indorsement of Mr. Shaw nd both his machines.

CASTING THE FUTURE.

A GLANCE INTO THE SECOND CENTURY OF AMERICAN LIFE.

What It Is Expected to Bring Forth-Suffrage for Woman and the Outlook for the Colored Race in the South-Distribu-

TWRITTEN FOR THE DISPATCH.1

We have fairly begun the second century of our national life. The first century has gathered for us some political gains that will, as we trust, prove enduring; what may we expect of the second century? Manhood suffrage is one of the achievements of our first century; I trust that the second will give us an intelligent and a virtuous suffrage. The ballot ought to be within easy reach of every man who knows how to handle it, and can be trusted to handle it without hurting himself or his neighbors.

There ought to be no artificial or conventional barriers. To the poor equally with the rich, to the black man equally with the white man, to the immigrant equally with the native, this privilege should be given; but not to the ignoramus equally with the intelligent man, not to the criminal equally with the law-abiding ballot he votes, is not fit to vote. The man who cannot keep out of the jails and the police courts, the able-bodied man who cannot keep out of the almshouse, is not fit to vote. It is fatuity, it is infatuation, it is mortal stupidity to put the delicate and difficult business of governing this country Ar. Shaw responded that when he put pipes into a mine the superintendent had the placing of them, and he had no voice in the matter. He said his instrument to superintendent had the placing of them, and he had no voice in the matter.

The last century has brought to these shores a great influx of population from nds; let us hope that the next century will Americanize them. I believe in stand this motto. It matters little where a man was born, nor how long he has been on this continent; but when he comes to this country and makes his home here, then he ought to be an American and nothing else. Let him stop calling himself an English-man, or an Irishman, or a German, or a Dane, or a Bohemian; let him begin at once to call himsel! an American. We hear too much about the German vote, and the Irish shall cease to hear all such offensive and unpatriotic phrases before the end of another Will the next century bring the suffrage to women? I cannot be confident, but I suspect that it will. When they desire it they will certainly have it. It may be of them-until our governments generally are more nearly on a peace basis; until the enforcement of law is a less bloody and brutal business than it is at present, Until the great majority of them do desire it, it shall not be thrust upon them; when they thrust upon them; when they desire it, no power can withhold it from There are intelligent men in this country suffrage upon women immediately; there are intelligent men who are not in favor of con-ferring it upon them at all; but the great mass of the intelligent men are waiting for the women themselves to decide this question. It they demand the suffrage, it will be promptly granted to them. Whether be promptly granted to them. Whether they will make up their minds to take it within the next hundred years, is somewhat problematical but I incline to the opinion

What of that great mass of our population, the liberated slaves and their descend-ants? The last century has given them liberty and the ballot, the ballot without intelligence is a doubtful boon; so the black man has found it. The next century will give him, I trust, the knowledge that will make the ballot in his hands not only a weapon of defence to him, but an instrument of service to his country. Before the end of the present century of our national life, I look to see the colored people occupying a large share of the land of the Southern States, possessing a fair proportion of the wealth of those States, living upon a high level of in-telligence and virtue, with full political rights, and in harmonious social relations with their white fellow-citizens,

And this peaceful and prosperous condi-tion of affairs at the South will be brought about, not by the intermeddling of Congress. but by the gradual education and elevation of the black man, and by a better under-standing and a more perfect recognition of Christian obligations on the part of both

What may we hope for as the result of the great social and industrial problems now confronting us? The strife of employer and employed, the feud of rich and poor, the labor question, the land question, the question of trusts and monopolies, the question about the railways and telegraphs, the whole social question, vast, many-sided, iusistent, pressing upon us now in a hundred forms-how is it all going to be settled? I wish I knew! Some changes will take place, that is certain-some radical changes, I trust that they may take place peacefully, yet I hope with trembling.

The Distribution of Wealth. Great changes most often come with convulsion and disturbance:

For all the dark of time reveals A bridal dawn of thunder peals, Whenever Thought has wedded Fact.

We have studied the production of wealth very diligently during the last century; we have brought the arts of production to great perfection; we know how to create wealth; but we have a great deal yet to learn about the best ways of distributing it. What we can do by wise laws and better social organization to lessen the social inequalities, to improve the chances of those who come into life with a poer equipment, to open a free path before every man, it is hard to say; we shall make many experiments and some faitures, no doubt; but I trust that we shall be guided toward a wise solution of this

That these social questions will all be settled by the end of our second century, I cannot hope; but we may trust that some progress will be made in the direction of a more perfect application of the principles of Christian democracy to the industrial and social order. In short, we will continue to cherish the expectation, that the second centennial of President Washington's inauguration will see this whole land united, prosperous and

THE DAY OF PALMS. Passion Week Will Be Observed by Many of Our Churches.

CHRISTENDOM'S GREAT FESTIVAL

Few of the Themes That Will Be Discussed in Our Pulpits. GLEANINGS FROM CHURCH PIELDS

Spurgeon said that the best thing to preach about was: "Forty Minutes." The preacher who passes this limit unless he is extraordinary may be sure that he wearies his congregation. There are preachers who can edify their hearers for an hour or more, but they are the exceptions and not the rule. It is a rare thing that sermons are objected to for being too short. Palm Sunday, which comes to-morrow, receives very slight attention from Protest ant pulpits. The great Christian testival commemorating the resurrection is a week ahead. The passion week of our Saviour furnished striking illustrations of human nature as it appears in all times. One day the multitude cast their palm branches be-fore the Nazarene and cried: "Hosanna." The next day the cry was: "Crucify him;

All the great leaders who have helped the world on to the latter day have passed through similar experiences. Popularity is very uncertain quantity. A good reflexion for Paim Sunday is the uncertainty of human applause. The world's Redeemer who heard the hospinas of the mul titude in Jerusalem at the beginning of the passion received the crown of thorns the day

REES THAT BREW BEER. They Can Make the Beverage in a Day and It Is Warranted Good. New York Morning Journal.1

A friend of James Johnson, Quebec street Kingston, Opt., brought him a swarm of California beer bees. Hived in self-sealers and given a mixture of syrup, sugar and water, the colony manufactures about three quarts of beer, equal, it is said, to malt, and enough drunk will put a head on a fellow as big as any one could desire.

They are in an eight-ounce bottle, and esemble a small sponge. When placed in the sun or in a warm place they shoo rapidly from their bed to the top of the fluid, then return languidly to the bottom again. When hundreds of them shoot at once they make things sizzle. About 24 hours com-pletes the make, and the beverage is then fit for use.

TAMING A GRIZZLY

It Is Easy to Do if You Can Wield a Bas ball Bat in Good Style,

It is queer what wonders usage will work. Out at Medicine Hat, on the Canadian Pacific Railroad, the station agent has charge of an enormous grizzly bear-an animal that all well-informed sportsmen regard as the most vicious, fearless and dangerous wild animal on earth. The station agent may appreciate this fact or he may not, but, at all events, he has got the grizzly to take care of, and in a year the only harm it has done was when it tore a little girl's leg most frightfully.

The agent says that "grizzlies are easy to handle it you have the right tool by you. The thing you want is a baseball bat. When they get fractious you hit'em a whack on the skull with a bat, and you can do anything you please with them.

Rold Ren Butler. Minneapolis Journal, 1

Byron Sutherland, who has just returned from New Orleans, had his attention called while in the Crescent City to two mementoes of Ben Butler's war time reign that suggest a vein of humor and sarcasm in Ben's composition that has been hitherto unsuspected In Jackson square and on Clay street, respectively, are bronze statues of Andrew Jackson and Henry Clay of heroic size, each standing on a granite base. When the oblique-eyed Massachusetts General was the ruling potentate in New Orleans, the smooth granite offered too tempting a mark to be carelessly passed by, so, by his order, an inscription was cut under each statue that under Old Hickory being the old hero's memorable utterance, "The Union must and shall be preserved." 'Under Henry Clay was placed the no less powerful sentiment which he uttered in the United States Sen-ate, commencing, "If I could eradicate this deepest stain (slavery) from the escutcheon of the nation," etc. During Butler's iron rule no one dared tamper with these in-scriptions, and since the war closed no one has cared to, so that there they remain, as plainly decipherable as when first placed there 26 years ago.
