BIRDS IN THE TELEGRAPH POLES

TREEPARED FOR THE DISPATCH, I One of the most valuable and interesting of the new electrical arts is that of welding, to which attention was first called a year or two ago by Prof. Elihu Thomson, and which has since been carried to a notable degree of perfection. A recent development is that of this searching nature. welding the shells of projectiles, and a huge factory has just been fitted up in New Eugland for the work, upon which a striking economy over the old methods is ef-

A great deal of work is also being done in the welding of steel tires, steel cables, boiler tubes, electric wires, pieces of dissimilar metal, chain links, barrel hoops, cotton bale ties, ax heads and edges, etc. The manner in which the welding is done has already been seen by Pittsburgers who visited the Exposition building a short time ago. The alternating current is employed. The pieces of metal are united by jamming them together and passing the current through them until the metal becomes soft enough from heating to form a perfect joint. The time required for welding runs from a fraction of a second up to five minutes, de-pending on the size of the metal. In the machine are two heavy copper clamps, one movable, the other fixed. Into these clamps are put the ends of the objects to be welded together. Pressing is then applied by means of a crank bringing the two pieces or objects together. By means of a "converter," a current of enormous volume and very low pressure passes through the sbutted ends. Enormous heat is developed. The weld begins at the core of the pieces, and extends rapidly outward to the surface. Intimute union takes place immediately. and almost before one sees it, the work has

With an ordinary welder iron bars of from %-inch diameter to 13/-inch are welded, and the joint is as solid as any part of the original pieces. Such bars under welding treatment become red hot for about an inch and a half on each side of the weld, but are comparatively cool at a distance of another inch. The process with tubes and other metal parts is much the same.

A new application for electric welding has just been found in the building of men-ofthe plates. This new method is inconceivably quicker and cheaper than the old. tric welding is now being largely used in different parts of the country, and has already entered so largely into the list of estake their work, and can get it done for a Ornamental Poles and Wires.

The methods of placing electric lights around the streets and public places have been numerous and widely different, but at the present time a marked tendency is showing itself toward the use of low poles only. lump posts they oust, but are much shorter fortunate as to adopt. A few years ago one of the sights of New York City was Madison Square, with its cluster of large arc lights rhaps 150 feet up in the air, shedding a soft moonshine over the children as they played and the lovers who strolled beneath the silvered boughs. But the "tower" was replaced by short poles, and the order to "let the lower lights be burning" has been heard with the result that before long these there will be the silvered boughs. But the "tower" was replaced by short poles, and the order to "let the lower lights be burning" has been the silvered by the silvered boughs. But the "tower" was replaced by short poles, and the order to which is found to be of the utmost value, the electric drill and mallet. The drill is quick in action and under perfect control. The mallet, being smooth and round and without external coils or protect. Meantime, an improvement is going on in the design of the short poles, especially where iron has been admitted as a construc-tive material. The flexibility of the electric system has invited the trial of novel methods. Thus, in Berlin, the arc lights are carried on brackets of handsome iron filling in the tooth. scrollwork, reaching out over the sidewalk from the house against which they have been fastened. The effect is said to be very pretty. Another plan proposed has been that of carrying light and graceful iron neross a street and letting the lamp hang at the center. An approximation to this is seen in many American cities, where at street intersections, the lamps are run out at the end of long most arms. The effect thus obtained is pretty and brilliant. One thing is evident and that is, that poles need not be ugly and that wires need not be obtrusive. In Italy, a novel way of getting the wires out of sight has been to carry them along-side the fronts of houses, against which they lie flat and practically concealed. A new scheme recently brought forward in America, has been to bunch the wires in hight troughs or aerial conduits carried on ornamental poles at the edges of the side-

This subject has become a leading theme in New York and Boston, where the questions of rapid transit more and more press for solution. in Boston the matter was dis cussed a tew days ago at a dinner of the important Boot and Shoe Club, whose memhers are evidently of the shrewd opinion that the more people can enjoy rapid trausit the more leisure they will have for the healthy wearing out of shoe leather. A striking contribution to the data brought forward was a letter from Sir Benjamin Baker, the well-known engineer of the great Forth bridge, who is developing the new underground electric system in London. One electric road, 60 feet underground, four miles long, is now running most successfully and has already carried more than a million passengers. That road is to be doubled in enoth and Sir Benjamin states that another is to dip under it at right angles from west to east, a length of six miles, penetrating in more senses than one to the very heart of the city. A plant of 5,000 horse-power is to be put in at the end of the line. The trains, of which there will be 18 to start with, will consist of six cars and will each your up to a maximum of 25, and the electrie locomotives will develop 300 horsepower at 13 to 14 miles. Like the other old the line will run through circular iron tunnels, each track separate. It will be low down, below all sewers and pipes, avoiding all complaints, damage to property and the like. This work is of special interest to such a city as Boston, whose tortuous, narrow streets are an insurmountable obstacle to cable traction, and whose elevated roads, if ever built, would require the cutting through of a new thorough are. The city is outgrowing the facilities of its surface electric street car facilities and is now turning its eyes to the remarkable achievements conservative old London. It is stated that Paris is to copy the new plan very soon. In New York the plan has so far progressed that elaborate details have been worked out, and leading electrical companies and engineers stand ready to perform their part of the undertaking. Poles as Apartment Houses.

Attention has recently been called to the fact that out West the red cedar telegraph poles are often attacked and rendered useless by the borings of the woodpecker, which not only uses the pole as a kind of marker thouse, but makes it into a gran Merchant Tailor, 407 Wood street. apartment bouse, but makes it into a granary also. It seems to have struck the birds that the snakes could not climb the smooth poles as easily as they could the trees, and Process of Welding by the Use of the A singular fact is that, since making this change of base, the birds, which had placed the opening of the nest at the bottom to render entry by the reptiles difficult, have now, under the safer conditions, reverted to an earlier practice of leaving the crifice in 21 hbs granulated sugar......$1 00

It is stated that in Brazil the telegraph wires have suffered from the growth around them of orchids. Similar trouble has been experienced in other tropical regions from the tricks of monkeys, which have not only used the wires as a free gynasium, but have tried their best to undo the painful work of the lineman and constructor. But, after all, the monkeys swinging from the wire by their tails and cracking cocoanuts on the in-sulators, find their rivals in some of our sharp-shooting cowboys, who, when feeling specially festive, will ride across the plains at full tilt, aiming as they go at the glitter-ing glass knobs of the telegraph line, which, of course, soon succumb to a few volleys of

during the past few years, and its progressive tendency is further shown in the extent to which it is being supplemented by electrical appliances. There are, however, some departments of the photographer's work which have suffered in consequence of the primitiveness of the devices em-ployed, and in which modern ideas are effecting most beneficial changes. Among these is an arrangement for improving the lighting of the laboratory during the development of the plates. The little red class lantern lighted by a petroleum lamp often leaves much to be desired, the lamp may smoke or burn low, and this irregular and uncertain light may cause great incon-venience if it should happen at a moment when a plate is immersed in the developing bath. As a means of inducing greater certainty and convenience in this operation, a very ingenious little apparatus has been invented, which furnishes the photographer with just the quality and quantity of light he requires for his operations. This invention consists of a little incandescent electric lamp, which burns under a red glass. The apparatus is very simple, and the zines employed for the battery are mounted in such a way that it is very easy to change them when required. The re-flector containing the red lamp can be moved round the apparatus; moreover, it turns on an axle, which enables it to be directed downward, and thus to light up the developing vessel. Although for the purpose of photographic operations, the reflector is with a movable red lantern, lantern of any other color may be substi-

Electricity in Dentistry.

An interesting demonstration of the possibilities of electrical application in denwar and other iron or steel clad ships by tistry was recently given before the Institute using it to weld on the heads of the rivets of of Medical Electricity in England. The of Medical Electricity in England, The most remarkable success was attained in the painless extraction of teeth by electricity. The apparatus used consisted of a small induction coil with a vibrating armature so tablished mechanic arts that an electric highly strained by screw clamps at either welding jobbing shop has been opened in | end that its vibrations were similar to those Brooklyn, N. Y., to which anybody can of a piano or violin string. The mode of operation is as follows: The patient takes the metal handles, or electrodes, connected by flexible wires to the coil, one each hand. The current is gradually increased until the electrical capacity of the patient is ascertained, when it is stopped and connection is made between the handles of specially constructed forceps and the poles of the coil. The current is again turned on at the moment of applying These poles are much taller than the gas the forceps to the tooth, which, under the circumstances, is extracted without pain. A further advantage of this application is that the use of the current is said to aid materially in checking the hemorrhage, which frequently forms so distressing a feature of dental operations

Dentists in this country have not been lo ty torches will nearly all be a thing of the past.

Meantime, an improvement is going on in blow is rapid and positive, and its force and rapidity can be regulated with the greatest accuracy by means of an adjustment screw,
