HELD THE OFFICERS AT BAY.

A Fighting Bull Dog Takes Possession of the Allegheny Lockup.

Jack Regan, who resides at the head of Federal street, Allegheny, was placed in the station house last night, charged with disorderly conduct. Half an hour after his arrival there his fighting bull dog, "Spider," appeared on the scene. He entered through the Federal street entrance to City Hall, and found his way down stairs. The door to the cell room being open he quietly slipped in and finally located the cell his master was resting. A joyful bark an-nounced his discovery and also his presence to the turnkey,

The dog was requested to move, but he quietly lay down in front of the cell and "winked his other eye." The gentleman decided the dog was an awful good animal to be left alone. Captain Agnew looked at him and arrived at the same conclusion. Turnkey James Sherry then tried to coax the canine prize fighter, but he refused to move until the hose had been turned on him, when he growled a few times and then

FIRED FROM A SALOON.

James English Seriously Injured by Colored Porter on Wylie Avenue,

James English, of 15 Shingiss street, was thrown out of a Wylie avenue saloon last night, and had his ankle sprained and his head badly cut. He was sent to Central station, where his wounds were dressed, and he was then taken to his home. Edward Anderson, the colored porter, who threw the man out of the saloon, was arrested and locked up in the Central station.

In on Two Charges of Larceny.

Robert Kelley, alias McGirt, was comn itted to fail by 'Squire Douglass, of Boston, yesterday on a charge of larceny made against him by Robert F. Sheppard. Detective C. W. Cook also made a similar charge, and Kelley was committed in default of $1,000 hail. He is suspected of being one of the Lake Erie robbers.

Kelly Will Not Die.

John Golden, Thomas Welch, John 'Hara and Coleman Conley, who were sent to jail to await the result of injuries inflicted by them on Michael Kelly, Friday night at the Lake Eric depot, will be given a hearing Tuesday. Kelly is reported ter, and will recover.

mons, said that as an off-hand opinion he would suppose that it wholesalers compounded they must also pay a compounder's icense.

A Lawyer's Pronounced Views. C, F. McKenna was the first lawyer found who had a pronounced view on the subject, and he did not coasider wholesalers subject to a compounder's license unless they operated a separate establishment for that purpose. Mr. McKenna's attention had been drawn to this phase two years ago, purpose, Mr. McKenna's attention and he said the Philadelphia courts had thus construed the law. "But," said the interrogator, "why did

Mr. Christy make the assertion that wholesalers were violating the law?" "Oh," said, Mr. McKenna, "I suppose

Mr. Christy was getting off a little pro bono publico. That is nothing unusual with luwvers. D. H. Martin argreed with Mr. McKenna in that he considered that wholesalers would not be obliged to take out a compounder's license unless they run a separate establishment for that branch of the business. Ex-Sheriff Huuter turaished copies of the different kinds of licenses granted, whole-salers, retailers, brewers, bottlers and brew-made on them to compounding or rectifying. The United States Bottling License.

Captain Dalgleish directed attention to the fact that a United States license for bottling specifies that the holder is only authorized to sell vinous, native wines and malt liquors, while the Brooks law is silent on the subject, and yet some bottlers bottle and sell old Monongahela, old Bourbon and all kinds of whiskies.

The amount of license that a first-class wholesale liquor dealer now pays each year amounts to a goodly sum of money without adding $500 more. In the first place he pays Uncle Sam in all $325; to the State $500, and on top of this is his city business tax and that levied by the Mercantile Ap-praiser, in all something like $1,500 a year in addition to the regular property tax, water rent, etc. As he is not prevented from selling on credit, as retailers are, and must necessarily give it rather extensively, it is potent that it requires a fortune to run a first-class wholesale house successfully.
