ciation, asking an immediate suspension of the tariffs on grain. The association exerts a wide influence in the southern portion of France, and its action will doubtless cause the Cabinet to reflect. At a meeting held to-day in Cognac, in the Department of Chatant, where 2,000 persons were present, resolutions similar to those adopted by the meeting in the Circus were passed, while the anti-tarlff speakers were greeted with enthusiastic cheers. These facts indicate the swift growth of a formidable movement against extreme protection.

The May Day celebrations are likely to prove a ridiculous failure, in consequence of the squabbles of the Sociatist leaders. The various factions-Marxist, Guesdist, Broussist, Allemanist, Anarchist, Possiblist, Collectivist and others-all having the common aspiration to bring about a street row, can not agree how to accomplish their purpose with the least danger of provoking an explosion which will end in their summary pun shment. ### Comments on Moltke's Death.

The newspaper comments on the late General Von Moltke are generally unsympathetic and often marked with a Chauvinist spirit that is repulsive to anybody but Frenchmen. Thus the Siecle says: The Gant salutes without vain anger this bar-barian chief, the last of so many invaders, with whom a whole age expires. La Republique Francaise savs: This muster of the art of war dishonored his most brilliant victories by cruelties and horrors which had been caltuly calculated beforehand and which were revolting to the most uv'eeling minds. The Rappel says: General Von Moltke made a sorrowful gift of militarism to Europe. His country, ruined by taxation, will soon learn to curse his memory.

The Figuro savs: This man who lives solely to make war, and to whom sentiment was unknown, was the first that insisted upon the annexation of Alsace-Lorraine. This should not be forgotten.

The Gaulois prints an interview with General Caaroberi, in which the Field Marshal is represented as saving: "Ger-many for a long time to come will be numble to find a man expable of eclipsing Von Moltke, although his pupils and successors may continue his line of work. It is we who now have the great strategist. I mean General Von Mirtbel, our Chiel of Staff."
