A BLONDE WIDOW'S HARD LUCK. She Buys an Outfit for a Namesake, but He Has Disappeared.

DETECTIVE BENDEL ON THE TRAIL

Mrs. Lena Sauers, a blende, plump and prepossessing widow, has started the machinery of the Department of Public Safety in motion, and with Detective Bendel at the throttle it is speeding after Jacob Sauera. The latter is not a blood relative of the lady, but she hoped to be related to him by marriage on the first day of next month, when Cupid and Hymen play hide-and-seek among the June roses.

Mrs. Sauers' husband died in Germany a year ago. The widow was disconsolate, but about three months ago came to this country, hoping that a change of scene would divert her mind from her great, and as she believed, irreparable loss. She had read wild, weird stories, printed in German text, of the wondrous beauty of the land of gold across the Atlantic, and she wanted to see for herself the bordes of painted savages and countless millions of buffalo' which roam the flowerstorred prairies. Therefore the came to Pittsburg.

Lena Meets With Jacob.

Mrs. Sauers took up her residence on Washington street. As a stranger in a foreign country, bereft of husband and childless, she often sighed to hear the soft and musical gutturals of the Fatherland. She longed to meet someone who had strolled Unter den Linden in old Berlin, and who could call before the mind's eye scenes dear to memory.

The widow had any amount of leisure and some money, and as she had nothing to do but make friends, it was not strange that she became acquainted with Jacob Sauers. The similarity in name proved a sharpedged tool with which to open the hermetic-ally sealed can of conversation, and to-gether they climbed their respective genea-logical trees and delved among the roots in an endeavor to find a connection between the two families. In this they failed; but while defeated, they were still unconquered, and having decided that their families ought to have been united at one time or another, they determined to marry, and thus indissolubly weld the two families. Combined Business With Love.

Jacob Sauers was a prepossessing - young man, perhaps a trifle more youthful than his betrothed. He had been in this country three years, and he was business from the ground up. He had been wreating a living from the world by peddling show cards, but his ambition was not satisfied; he wanted to reach out, Jacob and Lena indulged in long tete-atetes, as lovers will. They discussed the style of cot which they most affected, and agreed to dot a upon the particular shade of roses which should climb to their lattice window and awaken them in the morning by their fragrance. Now and again Jacob would interject a little business talk. Some method had to be provided for paying the rent. Landlords do not rent cottages for the romance of the thing. Then, again, Jacob thought an occasional $1 bill would help to "jolly along" the butch-er, baker and grocer. Finally he broached his plan. He thought be could make money peddling cigars, but to do that he would need a horse and wagon and a little capital. Lena was very much in love, so she bought a horse and wagon, for which she gave $85, paid $40 for 1,000 cigars and gave Jacob another $40 in cash.

Jacob Drops Out of Sight. Jacob professed undying constancy and a determination to make a fortune. He started on Monday on his quest. No word was heard of him on Tuesday, and Wednesday evening, the half-way house of the week for fond lovers, passed without any sign of the erstwhile affectionate Jacob.

The little blonde laid awake all Wednes-day night thinking. Early Thursday morning she made a tour of all the livery stables in the two cities. Jacob might have dropped dead, but he could not have carried the horse and wagon with him to a better world, She didn't find the rig, and it finally dawned upon her that she was out $165 in cash and a prospective husband. Yesterday Mrs. Sauers told her story to Inspector McAleese. That official was purzled. If Lena had given the outfit and money to Jacob he had a legal right to do as he pleased with them; and she could not punish him for breach of promise, for the date for fulfilling the marriage contract had not yet arrived. In this dilemma Inspector McAleese turned the case over to Detective Bendel, who has taken up the trail, and proposes to keep up his record of never going after a man without getting him.

PASSENGER TRAFFIC RECEIPTS.

MAY HURT THEIR TRADE.

What the Wholesale Liquor Dealers Are Limble to Miss by Being Compelled to Close Up—New Saloon Keepers Getting Their Work In.

It is intimated that some wholesale liquor lealers who may make their pile this year, and be ready to go out of business, may have a little fun with the county when their year expires. They lose three, and perhaps more days while awaiting the verdict, and pay days while awaiting the verdict, and pay over $1 50 licence per day. One of these days, too, is Saturday, and who can estimate the bottle and jug sales of a Saturday, unless he keep a record of the business.

It isn't likely that those who wish license in future will do so, but most applicants doubtless feel much disgruntled. Water that has passed the mill grinds no grist, and it is just possible that some people who miss their Sunday boose may get along, so well and feel so much better on Monday that they may be induced to swear off and make the dealers' loss permanent. With election days lost and three—possibly four—days to start with, wholesale dealers will lose about a week this year.

The wholesalers do consider it rather tough that they should have been compelled to shut down Thursday night. There were some who thought there was nothing to prevent their remaining open yesterday and delivering goods ordered before 12 o'clock Thursday night. Still, they concluded that discretion was better than running their heads against a stone wall, and, though nearly all of them kept open vesterday for the transaction of necessary business, no goods were sent out. Orders were taken in many instances for future sales and deliv-

It was odd on some of the main streets to see well-known saloons either closed up entirely or opened as eigar stores or restaurants or as both combined. There was an air of gloom about such places which was not dissipated by the presence of the proprietor's friends, who told him how sorry they felt. Some of the new people who were tor-tunate enough to have their saloons ready for the opening wore beaming countenances.

The strike has prevented many of the newly-opened saloons from presenting an attractive and finished appearance, but some of the lucky holders of licenses have opened up despite that drawback. The re-ceipts at Stroup's mixed drink bar Thurs-day, which will be turned over to the News-boys' Home fund, were $375 17. The total receipts at Mr. Stroup's wind-up were $1,537 02.

A MYSTERIOUS CIRCULAR

district received yesterday the following postal card : PITTSBURG, May 1. DEAR SIR - The Cigar Merchants' Union hereby notifies you not to give away cigars or tobies to encourage the liquor trade. If you do, you must not find fault if we appear against you in the next License Court. We are yours most respectfully, CIGAR MERCHANTS' UNION,

This notice created considerable feeling among those who received it, and it is generally pronounced as a piece of impudence. Several saloon keepers were visited, and expressed themselves in an emphatic manner. One of them stated that he expressed ner. One of them stated that he expressed the unanimous sentiment of all when he said that he could not conceive what the object of the notice was, or wherein it could benefit the union that sent it. He said that he presumed that a saloon proprietor had a right to give to a customer a tobic if he so desired, or give to a friend a cigar when in the saloon in a manuer just as legal as if it were given while on the street. He said that no good saloon gave men tobies or eigars with each drink merely for the purpose of gaining trade. These same sentiments were ex-
