

THE REIGN OF THE CZAR Is Again Aroused by the French Exhibition Seeking the Assistance of THE DESPISED HEBREWS. The Show of Russian Friendship for France Is Thus Marred.

FOLLOWING THE LEAD OF AMERICA

GOSSIP FROM THE GERMAN CAPITAL

cause they belonged to the union, the procession marched very slowly, while the band played "The Dead March in Saul." At this time the traffic in Oxford street had become very congested and the Inspector of Police who was on duty there requested the leaders to order the band to stop and at the same time give directions for the men to march at a quicker rate, as they were blocking traffic. This request was met with loud cries of "No, no," and the band continued to play. The police thereupon attempted to stop the musicians, but a crowd gathered and prevented them.

MINI PASHA'S TUMBLE.

Some Fresh Plastering Now Said to be Responsible for the Accident.

LONDON, May 23.—The true story of Emin Pasha's fall from the window of his house, which, when the fact was first known, created so much talk, excited so much discussion, and produced so much serious feeling, has at last been cleared out. It shows that the accident was a pure and simple fall. As will readily be imagined, the houses at Bagamoio are not renowned for their solidity of structure, as the climate does not necessitate the use of those building materials which are used in the latter part of the world. The room in which the Pasha and his friends had been lurching on this memorable day, had recently been plastered for about a week, and the plaster was very close, too, that day, and in order to get a little more air Emin went over to the window and leaned out against the new plaster, which was still wet. It gave way under his weight and he fell head first to the ground with the result which everybody remembers well. There were only two people in the room with him at the time, Mr. Stanley and his negro servant.

SISTER ROSE GERTRUDE EXPECTED.

She Will Take Her Husband to Europe to Show Him the Sights.

LONDON, May 23.—Madame Lutz, who is better known to the world at large as Sister Rose Gertrude, will, it is stated, shortly return to Europe as her husband wishes to visit London, Paris, Vienna, Berlin and the other chief continental cities in order to explain the hindrances and difficulties which are put in the way of those who wish to be religiously married. It is stated that she is willing to devote her lives to the cause of the poor, and she is also willing to be converted to the Roman Catholic faith, if that should be the wish of her husband. Sister Rose Gertrude's marriage has created a great deal of discussion, but the lady is not at all perturbed by the matter, and she is willing to devote her lives to the cause of the poor, and she is also willing to be converted to the Roman Catholic faith, if that should be the wish of her husband.

A WILD LEAP FOR LIBERTY.

Pursued by a Policeman, a Drunken Sailor Jumps From a Thirty-Foot Wall.

LONDON, May 23.—Quite a sensation was caused at Birkenhead by a wild leap for liberty, which was made by a man who was being pursued by the police. The fugitive of the Inman steamer City of New York, which arrived a couple of days ago in the Mersey, was paid off, and several of them went to a neighboring public house to get a drink. They did not all leave as sober as they entered, but they started to walk toward Seacombe, when one of them started to make a drunken leap for liberty. He was captured, but somehow managed to make his escape from custody and started at full speed along the river wall, hotly pursued by a policeman. When he found the latter coming on him, he deliberately jumped off the wall to the shore below, a distance of 30 feet. He fell upon the builders and arose, limped a short distance, but the injuries he had received were too great to enable him to continue, and he collapsed. The policeman, going by a safer route, descended to the shore and captured his prisoner in a dying condition.

ANOTHER PARLIAMENTARY SCANDAL.

This Time a Member Who Sits for a Welsh District Is at Fault.

LONDON, May 23.—Once again the public mind is disturbed by rumors of a scandal in Parliamentary life. It would appear as if there were to be no let up to the number of disclosures of intrigue which members of the House of Commons indulge in. The question as to what can be done to prevent the disgrace is exercising much attention from the ranks of those who pride themselves on the respectability of their lives, and who believe that the conduct of the members should be seen by all eyes and ears.

HUNTERS OF HUMAN HEADS.

The Ghastly Collection Purchased by the Government of Perak.

LONDON, May 23.—The Government of Perak has just purchased the ethnographical collection which was made by Signor Cerutti at Nias, an island which lies on the southwest coast of Sumatra. It is a curious fact that every one of the inhabitants of this island is an ethnographical collector on his own account, but the peculiar interest is in the fact that only specimens of human heads are desired, which have been taken by the collector himself from a living man. So great is the desire to obtain fresh specimens that the natives often go out head hunting, and this sport is as common with them as the chase in Europe. Most of the heads are taken from the skulls of men who are taken as ornaments or as proof of the collector's skill.

A GREAT ROYAL GATHERING.

Queen Victoria to Visit London Officially for the First Time in 20 Years.

LONDON, May 23.—It is exceedingly probable that the Queen will accept the invitation which has been tendered to her by the city and corporation to visit the city on the occasion of the presentation of its freedom to the Emperor of Germany. Should Her Majesty do so, it will be a popular move, as she has not visited the city officially for nearly 20 years. The Prince of Wales will be one of the guests on this occasion, and it will be many years since she has been so honored. A large number of royal and imperial personages will also be present on this day. In fact, one would go back to the coronation festivities of 1857, in order to find a parallel case.

TAILORS ON THE RAMPAGE.

Five Thousand of Them on Strike Create a Scene of Excitement in London.

LONDON, May 23.—There were some exciting scenes in connection with the tailors' strike in the fashionable quarters of the city. The procession which paraded the principal streets of the West End, 5,000 strong, marched up Regent street shortly after 4 o'clock and went along Oxford street to the marble arch. As the men passed the shops which had given in they raised loud cheers of victory, and they went to Messrs. Hammond & Co.'s, which firm had dismissed its men be-

AN $80,000 DONATION For the Foundation of an Episcopal Cathedral in Washington.

MISS MANN'S SPLENDID PRESENT.

A School for Girls, Also, in Connection With the Cathedral.

THE PROPERTY CONVEYED IN TRUST

(FROM A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.)

WASHINGTON, May 23.—An indenture was recorded at the City Hall today, whereby Miss Mary Elizabeth Mann conveyed in trust to the American Security and Trust Company lands owned by her in Lanier Heights, the primary purpose of the trust being to devote the property in question after Miss Mann's death to a cathedral endowment for the Protestant Episcopal diocese, of which the District of Columbia may form a part. After this object is accomplished and the cathedral foundation is otherwise sufficiently provided for, the property is to be devoted to the support of Episcopal educational institutions. The property conveyed, as described in the indenture, is 10 lots in the Lanier Heights, the property in question after Miss Mann's death to a cathedral endowment for the Protestant Episcopal diocese, of which the District of Columbia may form a part.

THE CONDITIONS OF THE TRUST.

The conditions of the trust are that Miss Mann shall, during her life, enjoy the rents, issues and profits of the property or other property that may be substituted therefor. Upon Miss Mann's death the trust company is to hold and dispose of the property under the direction of a board of trustees, which board is to be composed of the Protestant Episcopal Church, of which the District shall form a part; Rev. George William Douglas, S. T. A., and the rector and wardens for the time being of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal parish in this city.

THE PROPOSALS OF THE TRUST AS NAMED.

First, for a cathedral foundation or endowment for the Protestant Episcopal diocese; second, for a school for girls in connection with the cathedral; third, for a school for the poor, to be established before the expiration of five years after the death of Miss Mann. Secondly, when the property is to be substituted therefor, the property is to go to the establishment and maintenance of a school for girls in connection with the cathedral, provided that such school be established before the expiration of ten years, after Miss Mann's death.

THE PRESENT VALUED AT $80,000.

Thirdly, provision is made for using the property for religious bodies outside the cathedral foundation and other educational purposes in the case of the cathedral foundation and the school mentioned are otherwise sufficiently provided for. Finally, the trustees are to execute these trusts within 20 years, the lands shall be conveyed absolutely to the diocese, to be used for educational purposes. The property is valued at $80,000.

PRESBYTERIANS, METHODISTS AND MEMBERS OF OTHER RELIGIOUS BODIES OUTSIDE THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH HAVE JOINED IN APPROVING THE PLAN OF THE GREAT PROTESTANT CATHEDRAL FOR NEW YORK CITY.

The plan of the great Protestant Cathedral for New York City, and have given their hearty approval to the same. Similar rumors are likely to induce similar support for the proposed cathedral in the District of Columbia.

THE SEDUCTIVE POOL ROOMS.

Over the Long Bridge at Washington Patrolled by Uncle Sam's Clerks.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—If it has not been done already, there is likely soon to be a watch put upon Government clerks who frequent the pool rooms at the long bridge. The pool rooms at the long bridge, where the pool rooms were in the city, the chances for discovery were too many, and if clerks gambled on the river, it was usually through their friends. Since the recent act of Congress, they are visited only by hundreds of clerks. A well-known detective said today: "The pool rooms are at the bottom of most trouble that anyone has an idea of. Not long ago I had occasion to take the 1 o'clock train to Alexandria, and over 100 Government clerks got off the train at Jackson City, besides any number of others not in the service of the Government. It would make a Cabinet official's eyes bulge out of his head to see how many of Uncle Sam's clerks spend afternoon after afternoon in the poolrooms. Government clerks are by no means the only victims of these resorts, and they are very large per cent of the petty stealing by clerks in stores has as a direct cause the habits and desires brought on by too frequent visits to the city of odds and evens." A movement is on foot among the good people of Washington to memorialize the next Legislature of Virginia to enact rigid laws prohibiting gambling and pool selling.

A HARRISON BOOZER.

Congressman Owen Is Convinced That the President Will Be Renominated.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—Representative Owen, of Indiana, a Campbellite preacher and the most intimate of President Harrison's Indiana friends, who watched the grand tour with deep interest, arrived in the city today, and gave an enthusiastic opinion in regard to the effect of the Harrison boom. "I think," he said, "that no public man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in the estimation of the public wherever he went, and through his speeches became better known to the country at large. I do not think it close, and with it, I think, any man ever met with more flattering reception than he did through the line of his travel, nor made more friends than he did. There was not a mistake made by him and he grew in