Charlie Sevens Recovering From the Bite of a Copperhead Snake.

THE SWIFT NOT ALWAYS WINNERS.

A Doctor Asked to Declare That He Wasn't | tracing a valuable jewel. Some weeks ago Dead and Buried.

QUEER SIGNS ON SOME CITY STREETS

Little Charlie Sevens, the boy who was bitten by a copperhead last Sunday, is recovering slowly but surely. Dr. McCready, of Sewickley, thinks the boy will get well now, and accounts for it partly on the ground that the snake which did the biting was young. Copperheads grow in poisonous power with years. The case has enlisted the sympathy of Sewickleyans to an unwonted degree, because the boy is wonderfully bright and sweet in disposition, and, deaf and dumb as he is, intelligent into the bargain. Since last Sunday many a carriage this stopped at the picturesque cottage by the Little Sewickley, bringing kindly visitors to inquire for the boy, and to leave delicacies, fruit and flowers, and what delights the boy more than all else, picture-books, magazines and illustrated papers. He enjoys looking at the pictures, but whenever he comes to one in which a snake figures he closes the book at once.

The Race Not Always to the Swift.

The watermeion was simply immense It was really more than he cared to carry to the train, but as it was the first melon of the season that he had bought, and its advent in his East Ead home was calculated to make a sensation, he bought it and started away from the Liberty street store with it. He thought he had plenty of time to catch the train, but when he reached the Union station he saw some neighbors hurrying ahead of him, and be quickened his steps. The watermelon was beginning to feel heavy. But he hurried, and was almost running when he reached the gate just as the official shut it. "I want to go on that train, please let me through," he pleaded. The gentleman opened the gate, and the watermelon with its convoy passed through. For a moment the latter paused to consult the sign; which are alleged to inform the traveler, and then seeing a train just in motion on the right se set off on a run to catch it. The watermelon's weight had grown double by this time. Still he ran fast, holding the big fruit in his arms, much as the tather does he first baby. It was a race between him and the train, which was momentarily gain-ing speed. All down the long platform he travelers and railroad men stopping to look and to hurl encouraging words at him. He reached the rear platform of the last car at last, and by a superhuman effort swung himself and the precious melon—which by this time weighed a ton—aboard. Two brakemen helped him up. One compli-mented him on his sprinting powers; the other more practically asked: "Where are

'To Brushton!" panted the sprinter over "You are on the wrong train-there goes your train." hurriedly answered the brake-man, pointing across the depot to a train just getting under way.

The man with the melon dropped off the train at some risk to his limbs, for the cars were moving ten or fifteen miles an hour. As he walked back, to wait twenty minutes for another train, he avoided contact with his fellow-man. His soul was too heavy so was the water melon.

Risking Necks Rather Than Dollars. Fate and the Pittsburg and Western Railroad were kind to a large crowd of baseball cranks who object to paying for seats inside the ball grounds yesterday. A long line of passenger and box cars was strung out on the tracks between Exposition Park and the river, and about three hundred men and boys clambered up on the roofs of the cars before the game began. The crowd grew till every inch of this lofty and rather precarious perch was occupied. The view ould not have been very full or satisfactory, out enough of the game was visible through the open space between the top of the fence and the superstructure—specially built to thwart such unprofitable spectators—to make most of them howl every time the Pittsburgers found the ball. Seen from the grand stand the crowd on the car-tops looked very singular—only their legs were visible. It was generally remarked that the array of deadheads on the outside was larger yesterday than ever before.

Some Queer Signs in City Streets. A sign outside the Domestic Home on Anderson street, Allegheny, has attracted considerable attention. After the statement that lodging may be had there for 15 cents a night and $1 a week, appears this somewhat startling postscript; "Laying Out the Dead a Specialty." A little explanation seems needed. Are the lodgers in the home supposed to be expert in laying out, or are they to be laid out?

In the East End a sign to be seen from the Duquesne car window reads: "This Property to Be Let Alone. Inquire — "Of course the word "Alone" is an addition of some enemy, but as it is printed as neatly in white paint on a black board as the rest of the potice the effect is zero additionally. the rest of the notice, the effect is very odd.

Lots of Fun for the Boys.

"Catchee da Strah!" "See der bloomin" thing skute!" were the exclamations of a growd of bootblacks on Fourth avenue yesterday morning. Seven of them then started up the bill on a dead run, following a bunch of excelsion that was mysteriously skimming along the center of the street. One of the boys had taken a bunch of excelsior and tied a loosely entwined rope around, so as to leave a long streamer of the rope free. This he had dropped through the cable road slot, and it caught on the wire and went sailing along across Smithfield street and up the hill. It passed between a horse's feet as he climbed upward, and for a few moments it appeared as a runaway were imminent. The animal evidently was not accustomed to seeing bundles apparently propel themselves along the streets. The last seen of the excelsior was when it reached Forbes street, where it turned the corner, with the boys still in

Asked to Prove He Was Alive.

"Will you please state whether or not ou are dead," was the request that greeted Dr. Ferdinand T. Fenn, of Glendale, as be entered Register Conner's office yesterday

As Dr. Fenn entered the office on business an hour after the receipt of the letter he was politely requested to answer if he was dead. Dr. Fenn was glad to say that he was alive. He was shown the letter, which amused him greatly. The Schlick mentioned in it was a young man for whom he had stood as godfather. He was given the privilege of returning a reply to the letter.

A SLICK MAN FOOLED.

The Character of an Innocent Lad Is Used as a Target for Inexperienced Detect- It Won't Down, Despite the Protests ive Practice-Two Suits Likely to Fol-

The local agent of a well-known express company is threatened with two very serious suits, one of which arose out of an unsuccessful effort to play the detective in a Pittsburg jeweler had occasion to ship a diamond worth about $250. The stone was consigned to the express company. Some days later he received word that it had not reached its destination. The local agent was informed that unless the diamond was traced and restored he would be sued. The agent thought first of securing the services of the police detectives to find the guilty party, but finally decided to win fame for himself by depending entirely upon his own resources. He suspected a young boy clerk employed in the office, and at once hit on a brilliant scheme to catch him. A ome young woman was introduced to the boy, who soon apparently developed a great attachment for him. She used every means in her power to bring about a confession of his guilt. Her appeals for some little gift or token from him resulted, not in his making here present of the missing diamond, as she expected, but a handsome bracelet, which he purchased with money borrowed from friends. The scheme thus failed entirely, and the agent's exalted opinion of his ability in tracing crime took

In the meantime the father of the innocent boy learned of his son's trouble, and was very angry. The expressman was given to understand that he and his associates might expect a suit for conspiracy to be entered against them very shortly. The jeweler will not give up his diamond with-out a suit, and the father is determined to have redress for the injury to his son's character, while the disconcerted agent is scratching his head to know what to do

The latter says it was only a joke on the boy, while the jeweler declines to talk for publication. The two suits are expected to be entered within a few days.

COLONEL DAWSON BACK,

And Other Theatrical Swallows Foretell

the Approach of the Hustling Season. Colonel Sam Dawson, of the Bijou Theater managerial staff, rolled into town yesterday, well-bronzed by Old Sol and sea breezes and as lively as a kitten after five weeks' vacation. He was not expected here for a week or two, as the theater will not open till mid-August, but Colonel Dawson thinks he ought to be around to encourage the other hustlers in the local theatrical line who are dropping into town, and to the best of his ability he will make things cheerful. As to New York theatri-cals he says that "The Tar and the Tartar" has made a wonderfully good impression al-ready, but otherwise the hot weather has put a quietus upon business.

There are signs that the coming theatrical season in Pittsburg will be the liveliest ever known here, and it is already certain ever known here, and it is aircady certain that besides the new Alvin Theater, and the hardly a year old Duquesne, the Grand Opera House will blossom out in a way to astonish the natives. The opera house stage is being relaid entirely, and the auditorium is so full of scaffolding that Manager Will not lost there avery day Wilt gets lost there every day.

AN OUTSIDER WILL GET IT.

The New Chief Engineer Will Not Be a Present Member of the Department. The speculation about Superintendent Evans' successor is apparently as far from correct as ever. Chief Brown has positively stated to Mayor Gourley that the new office will be filled by nobody connected with the fire or police bureaus. The man will be selected from the outside, and the Chief promises he will be fully capable of earning $3,000 per year.

When Chief Brown was asked yesterday that the statement of Councilman Bigham

Some people who use it call attention to its dangerous condition, while some alleys are as smooth as floors with asphalt pave-There seems to be considerable cause for the grumbling.

MAHONEY DIED OF DRINK,

And His Drunken Wife Bode to Town Sit ting on His Coffin.

Daniel O. Mahoney, of West Bellevue borough, was found dead in a ravine near his home yesterday morning. He and his wife, both over 50 years of age, lived in a little tumble-down shanty. On Monday Mahoney started to the store to buy some coffee. His appetite overcame him, and he drank so much liquor that while walking along the edge of a deep hollow, he fell down through the bushes to the creek

The body was found yesterday morning, and the Coroner notified. A wagon was sent down and the remains were placed in a afternoon. The worthy doctor was so astonished for a moment that he could not answer, but finally managed to stammer that he thought he was alive. The cause of the query was the following letter received yesterday by Register Conner:

Burrato N. V. July 7.

'Squire Semple committed the woman to Squire Semple committee the woman to jail for ten days, charged with vagrancy. She will probably be sent to the Poor Farm. The old couple were known for miles around for their great sire for whisky, on which they almost lived. No inquest will be held.

THE GHOST WALKING.

of Many Politicians.

INTEREST IN TO-DAY'S MEETING.

Prominent Partisans in Favor of a Non-Partisan Judiciary.

A PLAN FOR PURIFYING CONVENTIONS

The ghost still walked late yesterday afternoon and would not down. But though politicians had their ears pointed, one way and the other, to catch points, there was nothing especially new developed except that a number of gentlemen were quoted by different authorities, each in its own fashion, one representing them as favoring the Gubernatorial appointments and the other as favoring a convention and a new deal, while some would like to dis-card at least two cards and draw to the third. In consequence it is just possible, according to pretty general expectations, that the Republican County Committee will be placed in a box nearly similar to that in which Solomon found himself when he cut the Gordian knot by proposing to cut the baby in two, only that the committee's position may be more difficult, as the baby isn't likely to submit to the dividing arrangement. An opinion was expressed that Mr. Fetterman had trusted too much to promises, and should, to make the riffle more easily, have set up delegates as Judge Porter did previous to the naming of the judges by the tend.

In Favor of the Appointments. Controller Morrow, Councilman McGon-Controller Morrow, Councilman McGonnigle, Mayor Gourley, Chief J. O. Brown, Collector Warmcastle, C. E. Speer and Attorneys John S. Lambie, R. A. Balph, R. B. Petty and C. C. Dickey think the committee should satisfy the Governor's appointments, as an indorsement of the idea of a non-partisan judiciary. Attorneys L. P. Stone and J. E. McKelvey did not commit themselves, but hazarded the opinion that the indications pointed to a possible snarl that might be hard to unravel.

On the other hand, Lawyers John F. Cox and T. M. McFarland, Dr. J. P. McCord and Assistant Postmaster Edwards ask for a new deal, with more or less pronounced-

Assistant District Attorney N. S. Williams, who is an aspirant, agrees with Judge Fetterman that rule 19, of the Republican Committee, does not confer on it the power to ratify; that there is no vacancy to fill, and all that the committee has power to do is to call a convention, if wanted. The ground taken is that any member of the party has a right to present himself as a candidate for office if he is willing to pay the fiddle and the committee most reserved. the fiddler, and the committee must recog-

R. B. Parkinson appears to look at the situation humorously, and says that as there is no longer any politics in the county, and the State Republican chiefs show no present disposition to disinter the hatchet, there doesn't appear to be much left for either Democrat or Republican who loves action but to join the Farmers' Alliance

The Making of an Alliance Man. Mr. Parkinson cannot see anything Jef-fersonian enough in the present situation to draw out a Democrat. It being objected that he had been too long divorced from agricultural pursuits to be eligible for mem-bership in the Alliance party, Judge Ewing suggested that he had a potato-hoeing job on hand, and he would allow Mr. Parkinson to acquire the necessary qualification by on hand, and he would allow Mr. Parkinson to acquire the necessary qualification by pulling out the weeds in the patch and kill-ing the Colorado beetle. Mr. Parkinson has the offer under advisement. All this brings ex-County Commissioner George Y. McKee forward with his plan of purifying conventions by the abolition of the delegate system. He suggests a modification of the Washington county system. Instead of, as then, electing delegates and instructing them as to first, second and third choice at the primary elections, and then leaving them to their judgment, Mr. McKee suggests that at the primaries, voters indicate first, second and third choice, and make the judge of election the delegate to the acceptance. election the delegate to the convention, strictly bound to carry out the wishes of those who send him, without power to trans-fer his credentials to any one. Mr. McKee argues that it is of little use for the people to express preferences so long as a delegate can do, substantially, what he pleases in the convention.

the convention. Remedy for Grievances.

As the primaries are under the law's con-trol, Mr. McKee says that an aggrieved party could have a remedy by prose-cuting a judge who might, be derelict. He could also have the judge paid for his trouble, say $5, and all the members of the primary board might be paid for the trouble of conducting the election, the money therefor to be provided by those who stand for nomination. stand for nomination

The present delegate system, Mr. McKee thinks in many cases no more than a farce, and very different from what it was in the 50's, when a delegate who disobeyed in-structions or sold out would have found his residence subsequently very uncomfort-
