LANCED BY APACHES.

A Woman's Horrible Sufferings in Central Arizona.

SHE CRAWLED TO A CANOA RANCH

Bruised With Stones and Left for Dead on the Desert Sand.

SIXTEEN MILES TRAVELED IN NINE DAYS

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—Mrs. William Page, of Phoenix, Ariz., tells a story of terrible sufferings and marvelous escape from the Apaches.

It appeared that William Kirkland Page and a few more Americans had established a camp in the mountains in the rear of the Canoa ranch, whence they sailed forth every morning for the purpose of cutting timber in the mountains, returning in the evening to camp.

A week later the Indians had surrendered to Captain Ervell, had delivered the Mexican girl and Ervell had placed eight or ten of their number in irons and sent them under a strong guard to Fort Buchanan.

The Indians Thrust Lances in Her.

It appears that immediately after capturing her the Indians had lanced her in various places, and then had thrown her into a gully and thrown rocks at her until they thought life was extinct.

When the morning came, she awoke, and as soon as her senses had so far recovered as to be able to decide what course to take, she commenced her terrible march, or rather crawling, fainting every now and then, until she reached the haven of security, Canoa ranch.

An eye witness to Mrs. Page's sufferings says: "A courier had arrived in Tucson, requesting Dr. Hughes to proceed at once to Canoa ranch, as Mrs. Page had found her way to that place after having been out rans, subsisting on grass, roots, etc., and no water on the route."

Dr. Hughes, on receiving the news, started at once for Canoa ranch, and he being on a horse and I on a mule, he hurried on alone. I made the best time I could with my mule, however, and arrived at Canoa only 40 minutes behind him.

Thirty-five miles in a little less than four hours is pretty fair for a mule pack, but I saw the poor woman. But what a sight!

She was also covered with rocks.

"Lance thrusts in both breasts and in numerous other places, bruises from rocks thrown at her by the Indians, almost everywhere covering her with blood, emaciated beyond description, her hands and knees all lacerated and a mass of raw flesh exposed and the bones, caused by crawling over the cruel rocks, up hill and down hill, for nine days, she being unable to stand on her feet. Sixteen miles in nine days. You can imagine what she must have suffered. No water to quench the burning thirst, no water for her gaping wounds.

"The doctor, after having little or no hope, stayed with her faithfully until recovery was assured. Her strong constitution and the tender care bestowed upon her by Dr. Hughes and his family, who had nursed her bedside, did wonders, and after several months she was entirely cured.

Shortly before I left the Territory to join the "Corded Army" I met her in the Sonora Valley, at some ranch, and if I had not known the lady I never would have recognized in the blooming woman before me the horrible sight which met my eye on that never-to-be forgotten night."
