Fair Visitors Look on at the Sham Battle and Cheer the Lads on to Victory.

The Second Brigade of the Army of Pennsylvania, Brigadier General Wiley in command, which has been encamped for the last few days adjacent to the new town of Kensington, a short distance from this city, had a severe encounter with the enemy yes-

The engagement lasted about an hour, during which the whole force was brought into action. The losses on the Pennsylvania side was very beavy, but the enemy was finally routed by a brilliant charge of the cavalry under Captain Jones.

Very much celat was given to the occasion by the presence in camp of a goodly company of fair visitors, who, unanticipatory of a sanguinary fight during the afternoon, had ourneyed down from the city to see their friends at the front. The presence of so many bright eyes and patriotic hearts, beating in sympathy with the rattle of musketry and the roar of cannon, for the valorous defenders so bravely doing battle for the Commonwealth, nerved the men to greater deeds and fired them with zeal to do or die. And it was with much weeping and heartrending anguish that the fair speciators saw many of the brave fellows die. But not-let it go down to history as a sad and lamentable fact-at the hands of the enemy, but from the fire, unintentionally directed, of their own comrades. Some-

QUICKLY PLACED UNDER ARMS.

When information was received at headquarters that the enemy was advancing in eree southward along the banks of the the river, the brigade was quickly placed under arms. The six regiments of infantry were placed in brigade formation, while the heridan troop of cavalry was sent out as a skirmishing line. While the cavalry was reconnoitering, the infantry was formed in two lines of battle front, the right wing, consisting of the Tenth, Fifteenth and Eighteenth Regiments, under Colonel Hawkins, forming the first line, with left thank resting on the tents; the left wing, composed of the Fifth, Sixteenth and Foureenth, with Colonel Burchfield, forming the second line, or reserve in the rear Battery B, four guns, under Captain Hunt, took up a position on the left flank of the

Presently the sounds of firing were heard eadquarters, denoting that the skirmishing arty had come up with the advanced posts the enemy. The cavalry used their cardoes with good effect, but having accom-dished their mission deployed on the right ank and thus rested for turther orders, he right wing then threw forward a line of driven in on the main body after a bout with the enemy. The first line poured vol-ley after volley on the enemy in cover, and simultaneously the battery of field pieces commenced practice, though rather prema-turely, and to the hazard of the cavalry, who had not cleared the range when the firing began.

THE FIRE BRISKLY RETURNED. In commy returned the fire with interest, and so briskly, despite the heavy guns, that the advance of the right wing was checked. The left wing was then brought up and went into action, advancing in a steady line across the prostrate men of the first line, who lay down to allow them to pass. The small park of artillery still plazed away, and as the reserve came up, limbered up and took up a fresh position in

The left wing advanced in good order, kneeling and firing, succeeded at length in repulsing the enemy which wavered, and then broke under a gallant charge with levelled bayonets, by the gallant left wing. Just when the victory had been so dearly secured, occurred the sad mistake mentioned secured, occurred the sad mistake mentioned shove. The battery of heavy guns did not crase firing when the left wing advanced at the charge, and the result was hear line of cheering blue-costs, advanced at the charge, and the resum was that the line of cheering blue-coats, rushing on to victory was enfilled by the artillers with much loss.

The thieves gained entrance through a locked the doors on the in-physical to the right and rested on the hollow under the rising ground near the railroad. The left wing laving passed the right in the attack, the position of the troops was in-versed, and in this order were formed up

A MISTARE IN THE FORMATION. It was then discovered that a mistake had been made in the the formation, and maneavers occupying some little time were necessary to get the six regiments into proper position. This at length necommans of companies. The necessity for reregimental band a race of about a mile. They had mustered on the right, and when it was found they were not in position they were ordered to double back to the left, a pro-ceeding which took much efficiency and a good deal of wind out of the German musicians of the brigade band.

While this was being done Battery B went through a series of evolutions, finally taking up a position in rear of the column be Sheridan troop gave an exhibition of skirmishing drill immediately after the fight. They advanced firing on an imaginary enemy from the right of the camp, and then charged the length of the parade ground. The infantry drew up in the hol-low, cheered vociterously at the troop, wheeled and returned. Formed in column in the center of the ground and headed by the bands, massed, the brigade passed in review before the brigade commander, and some 2,000 people who lined the rising ground along the rail-road. The column advanced to the south, wheeled into the hollow and marched to brigade headquarters and thence to positions opposite each quarters. Some of the regiments fired a volley or so before dismissing. A number of distinguished visitors from is city, including many ladies, viewed the fight and subsequent march from the brigade

A PLEASANT RECEPTION.

The briende officers assembled at headquarters at 820 o'clock in the evening in reouse to an order from the Brigadier General, The Brigade Band played a selection of choice airs during the reception which followed. Quartermaster General Walter W. Greenand was presented with a handsomely en sword by the brigade staff officers. The Colonel is an ex-staff officer of the brigade and very popular. He made his asknowledgements in a few soldierly words. The "pop" of the sunset gun caused no little alarm among the fair visitors at headquarters. They closed their dainty ears while the string was pulled. There were as many good looking women around head-

Colonel Chambers McKibben, Inspector General, and Colonel W. W. Greenland, Quartermaster General, are the sole occuunts of the Governor's quarters in camp. Captain A. E. Hunt, of Battery B, had many visitors to his comfortable quarters in the wood. The mess tent is all too small for the Captain's hospitable desires. Among those in camp yesterday were Captains Breck, Colonel S. M. Jackson, of the Eleventh Reserves, and Colonel R. A. Travers, of Tarentum; General Guthrie also lives there; Dr. Walters, Major Will-

Lieutenant-Colonel Frank Rutledge had command of the Eighteenth Regiment in the mimic fight. There will be another grand parade and skirmish drill to-day. Battery B will break camp to-morrow morning at 4 o'clock, crossing the river and marching into town by the Sharpsburg road.

New Move of the Standard Plate Glass Company-Brought on by the Failure of W. E. Schmertz, Who Was Treasurer of the Concern.

The Standard Plate Glass Company, of Butler, of which W. E. Schmertz, of this city, was Treasurer, is in the hands of a receiver. It was said that this condition of affairs has been brought about by Mr. Schmertz's failure. The receiver, D. E. Wheeler, has been the manager of the com pany for some time, and is thoroughly acquainted with the affairs of the concern, and enjoys the confidence of the stockhold-ers and creditors.

A call was made at Mr. Schmertz's resi dence last night in regard to the matter, but Mr. Schmertz is still to ill to be seen or to have authing to say in regard to his business affairs. His assignee, E. M. Quimby, however, stated that the report from Extler was correct, and that a receiver had charge of the Standard Company's plant, upon which extensive improvements have been made, making this one of the finest and most complete plants in the plate glass trade

Mr. Schmertz was treasurer of the company, and became personally responsible

Neither of these gentlemen could be seen last evening by a Disparch representative, who called in quest of further information, Mr. Chambers sending down word that he was seriously indisposed and unable to talk in regard to the matter.

Two more executions were issued against Mr. Schmertz yesterday, one by William F. Morgan & Co. 100 $20,833 67 and one by Charles W. Lee for $5,047 59.

It was said that three of these creditors had retained Attorney W. S. Pier, and empowered him to file a bill in equity in their behalf against Mr. Schmertz and others in whose favor judgments have been confessed. A call was made on Mr. Pier yesterday afternoon, for the purpose of learning the scope of the bill in equity which he was said to be preparing. Mr. Pier, though affable, was not communicative, merely saying that he could not make a statement as it might be detrimental to his clients. Mr. Quimby, when asked about the matter, said that he had not heard of it, and had nothing to say, as he did not believe any such steps had been taken.

A New York Youth En Route Home to Receive His Father's Blessing.

A young man with a gun attracted much attention at the Union depot last night, but as the gun was encased in leather it did not prematurely explode. The youth had a little story. He is a young New Yorker of good family, so he says, who was sent away by an irate parent a year and a half ago for too much fast living at Yale, and afterward ng man, who went under the name of Leon F. He is now on his way home, glad to accept the proverbial fatted calf or anything else good to cat. He says he is tired of the West and was very glad when a short time ago he received a letter from his father telling him to come home and all would be forgiven. Horse races and poker are hereafter tabooed by "Crandal," and he will stick to his father's roof and grow "real devilish" on seltzer and lemon, nothing stronger.

AFTER TIN PLATE MEN

Mr. Niedringhaus Sends Representatives to Europe to BRING WELSH WORKMEN OVER An Old Roller Says He Can Easily Make Up

a Dozen Crews Here. NOT NECESSARY TO BRING OTHERS

The controversy over the proposed importation of foreign tin plate workers continues, and now that ex-Congressman Niedringhaus has sent his manager, Mr. Lewis, and his two sons to Europe, presumably for the pur-pose of engaging "dippers," the officials of the labor organizations opposed to this kind of a proceeding have been greatly stirred up. Said Assistant President Garland, of the Amalgamated Association, yesterday: "We can now furnish Mr. Niedringhaus with the names of more men than he will need to operate every department of his plant, but certainly they will not work for him so long as his firm operates a non-union mill. Let the St. Louis Stamping Company sign our scale and we will send him our list from which to make his selection."

A. P. Rollins was met last night by a DISPATCH reporter. He said he could pick ip enough men to run a dosen tin plate lants by the Morewood process, which is the latest patent. Continuing, Mr. Rol-lins said: "Mr. Niedringhaus claims the old Welsh workers have been here so long that they have forgotten how to operate the Morewood process, but he can get all the men he wants if he will pay the money.

THE WAGES THAT ARE WANTED. "Good men will not work for him until hey get the proper wages. We call that 100 per cent more than is paid in Great Britain. Mr. Niedringhaus can make up his mind that he is not dealing with Huns. He can go to Great Britain if he wants to and make all

Great Britain if he wants to and make all the contracts he chooses for workmen, but he will find that as soon as they come here and learn the value of their labor they will not go to work. Even his manager, Mr. Lewis, while in Pittsburg about a week ago, falled to entice tin plate rollers who have been in the country but two weeks until he would sign the scale."

Commenting on the position taken on this matter by Mr. Niedringhaus, this week's American Manufacturer will say that the excongressman cannot successfully claim that the manufacture of Nos. 24 to 30 sheet iron and the pickling and cold rolling of the same is a new industry. This is just what the Amalgamated officials have been claiming right along. They would have nothing to say if men were needed for a newly established industry for which men could not be found in America. But they claim that in plate rollers are no more or less than fine sheet iron rollers and that the other date rollers are no more or less than fine neet iron rollers, and that the other ranches of the trade can easily be supplied branches of the trade can easily be supplied with practical men who have not been here long enough to forget the business.

As Mr. Niedringhaus is said to have sent for "dippers" and other men who work at wasning and tinning, because he claimed it was necessary to have skilled workmen for these departments, the following simple explanation of the process, made by a workmun, is given:

HOW TO MAKE TIN PLATES. "The crude iron or black plates measure 20 by 14 inches and 28 by 20 inches and are transformed as follows: The fron plate is first placed in pickle in a bath of strong sulphuric acid heated by steam; that is to re-move all impurities from the iron. Then it move all impurities from the iron. Then it is placed in soak in a vat of plain water to wash the sulphuric acid off. Then a hard rubbing of sand makes the surface smooth and strong and the plate is assorted according to quality. Another bath of cold water jurther cleanses it and still another douche of pure water renders it fit for the tin man. The tinner takes the pickled plate and places it in a bath of palm oll, where it remains for several minutes, and then transfers it to another tank in which is a preparation of tin or terme (an alloy of lead and tin.) After it has been completely soaked in this solution, another bath of different grade of alloy receives it, and then it passes over to the washuman, who washes it carefully in boiling oil and places it upon a table.

"Eacl plate is them taken severately with oil and places it upon a table.

"Each plate is then taken separately with a pair of tongs and dipped into a stronger mixture of tin or terne. The washman with a brush made of hemp thoroughly spreads the metal over the whole surface of the the metal over the whole surface of the sheet, and it is then given its final bath of grease and placed on a rack to dry. When ready the cleaner takes the plate and puts it in a box of sawdust, where it is quickly rubbed and again a rubbing of brand is given, after which it is placed upon a table and smartly rubbed with sheepskin until it becomes a bright and shining tin plate fit for the best roof in the country. After being sorted into perfects and wasters' the plates are stamped according to quality and packed in boxes of 56 of the larger and 112 of the smaller size, duly branded and ready for shipment."

CLAIMS HE CAN'T BE FOILED. While appearing to feel a little uneasy over the stand taken in this matter by the Amalgamated Association, Mr. Niedringhaus is quoted as saying that he thinks the attempts to foil him in his purpose amount to simply nothing. It has been known for six months that he was erecting a large tin plate mill, and he says no one applied for work, and he thinks if there were any in the country they would have applied for a job. In a recent interview, when asked if he had signed a contract to bring men here. Mr. Niedringhaus said: "We have built those signed a contract to bring men here, Mr. Niedringhaus said: "We have built those mills to run them, and we propose to run them, no matter where the labor comes from. Is it not sufficient that we pay double the wages paid in England to bring all the workmen here we want? You can say what you please, labor will go where best paid, and we pay the best wages here."

John Howells, a Welshman, who was formerly employed by Mr. Niedringhaus as head roller, was a practical tin plate worker. He contirms the statement made by Amalgamated officials that there are plenty of tin plate workers in this country.

"You don't hear any kicks coming from the mion mills," said he. "Now, about importing tin plate workers. It is easier talked about than done. The workmen on the other side are in constant communication with those on this. They are all members of the union. They know about the status of affairs at the Niedringhaus mills, almost as well as he knows it himself, and if he thinks he will get men as easy as he says almost as well as he knows it himself, and if he thinks he will get men as easy as he says he can, he is mistaken. They may come and work in union mills, but they will never come and work in Mr. Niedringhaus' non-union mill. Mr. Weihe's stand is a good one and every member of the association ought to back him in opposing the importation of contract labor.

THE WAY WELSHMEN SIZE IT UP. "If you could read some things our Welsh papers say about the Little Tin God you would be quickly convinced that whatever else they may be on the other side, they are not ignorant of the fact that it takes skilled men to make tin plate. They also know all about the way we got duped by Mr. Niedringhaus and the Tin Plate Association when they got us to send a committee to Washington to ask for a tariff on tin plate, so that the Ways and Means Committee would think the workmen wanted the tariff. That makes them afraid of being duped in the same way by Mr. Nielstinghaus if they came over to by Mr. Neidringhaus if they came over to work for him."

work for him."

The total shipments of tin plate to the United States from Great Britain in the first half of the present year were 306,206 tons. In 1882 the total shipments for the whole year were but 25,000 tons. This enormous increase this year may be explained by the fact that Mr. Niedringhaus and other manufacturers secured large shipments early in the year, previous to July 2, to avoid paying the increased duty.

Being Turned Away From Home, After a Long Absence, A Young Man Asks to Be Locked Up-He Declares He Is a Forger.

Inspector McAleese received a surprise last night shortly before 12 o'clock, when a pretty well dressed young fellow, over 6 feet tall and of intelligent appearance, walked into Central station and coolly said he was a forger and wanted to be arrested The Inspector was at first inclined to think the young fellow was either drunk or insane, but after talking to him for awhile became convinced that he had really compecame convinced that he had really com-mitted the crimes he charged himself with. When the young man first entered the station he wanted to know if the police had any clue to John Hervey, the forger. When informed that they had not the young man said he was the man and was ready to give himself up.

informed that they had not the young man said he was the man and was ready to give himself up.

The police had no information that such a person was wanted on that charge, but a spector McAieese talked to Hervey gradually drew his story from him, while you was the said of the such a such a factor of Turtle Creek, where the father lives in the case that comes after a life of prosperity. Young John, about two years ago, went to Homestead ann secured employment in the steel works, but that kind of work did not suit him and he returned to his father, after an absence of three months.

A short time clapsed when he determined to go to Chicago and embark in business. When he broached the subject to his father and demanded a couple of thousand dollars for a start, the old gentleman informed him that he must wait until he became of age, the son then being only a little over 20 years old. His father's advice did not satisfy him, and he decided to go out and raise the money in another way.

Accordingly he went around among a number of his father's friends and borrowed money on promissory notes, to which he had forged his father's name. From one lady he thus procured $250, and from three or four other parties he got $100 each. Then he borrowed several hundred dollars more in loans of from $2 to $50.

With this money he went West, but being for awhile and then drifted further West, and has been knocking about all over the country ever since.

About two weeks ago he decided to come back home. He arrived home on Sunday at midnight and found that the folks had moved to Turtle Creek. He walked to the new house and lay down on the front porch. In the morning, when the family came downstairs, they found him there, but his sisters gaye him to understand that his parents did not want him at home and that they would rather know that he was safely locked up in the penitentiary, where he could cause no more trouble.

"I wanted to see my dear old mother awful bad," said the young fellow in conclusion, "but what they said broke my heart and I started away without seeing her or father. I have carefully deliberated what I should do and have decided that the best thing I can do is to give myself up and they can punish me as they please."

After listening to this peculiar story Inspector McAleese ordered the young man locked up and this morning will investigate his statements. The Inspector says that while he has no doubt that Hervey is guilty, as he says, it is not likely that his parents wish to prosecute him, and if that is the case he will be released to-day. Hervey says he is 22 years of age and is 6 feet 2 inches tall. He is evidently a young man who has had a good home, and his manners are polite and respectful.

A Woman Wants the City to Pay for Her Burned Up Property.

SOME SNAP SHOTS AT CITY MATTERS

The Allegheny Committee on Public Works met last night, William Kennedy was in the chair. The first business was the consideration of bids, and those for the improvement of the roadway on Monument Hill were taken up. Carson & Orr had a bid for $2,647 41, without curbing, while F.

Gwinner bid $3,169 11, with curbing. There being an irregularity in one bid, it was decided to readvertise. There was only one bid for the remodeling of City Hall, submitted by Joseph Anglin, for $13,897. The matter was laid over. The Scheffler Bridge Company was the lowest bidder for the Herr's Island bridge, the amount asked being $11,040.

H. W. Oliver, President of the Pittsburg and Western Railroad, was given a hearing on this subject. Mr. Oliver said it would be a careless, criminal action on the part of Allegheny Councils to build such a bridge as proposed at Herr's Island. To the speaker's own knowledge the same kind of a bridge has been washed away at least three times in 15 years. To build such a bridge would be a waste of money. The railroad crossings at that point, the speaker said, were the most dangerous in the two cities, and there should be an overhead viaduet from Ohio street to the island, and each of the three parties interested should pay its share fairly

MR. OLIVER'S SUGGESTIONS. Mr. Oliver thought that if the city would appropriate about $30,000 for the bridge, the other corporations would construct a viaduct in a manner to suit everybody. He suggested that a meeting of those interested could be held to-day and definite plans

Emil Winters said it was six months since the old bridge was swept away and the railroad companies could be gotten to do nothing in the matter. The temporary structure was such that it would not last long. The new bridge proposed by Mr. Oliver could not be built in less than six or nine months; meanwhile what were the people living on the island to do? Mr. Winters said that the bridge bid for was to be two feet higher than the old one and if it was swept away within the next ten years he would give a bond to replace it free of charge to the city.

Mr. Rippey remarked that both the West Penn and Pittsburg and Western roads had been guilty of stealing strees in that neighborhood, and now the railroads wanted the city to build them a bridge so as to protect them.

The Basis of Margaret Colter's Claim Against the City.

Margaret Colter called at the City Attor-ney's office yesterday and entered a verbal claim for damages against the city for the destruction by fire of her house and its contents, on Stockholm street, near Twenty-eight street, last Saturday night. The basis eight street, last Saturday night. The basis of her claim was an insufficient water sup. ply. She said the firemen were on the ground promptly and could have extinguished the fire with slight loss if they had been able to procure water, but the water supply of that section had been shut off a couple of days before and had not been turned on again. Her house and all her goods were in consequence destroyed.

Assistant City Attorney House listened to the complaint and promised to consult Chief Attorney Moreland concerning the matter, but it is not likely any damages will be allowed, as a similar case was dismissed by the Finance Committee after long consideration, at its last meeting.

It did not require any great foresight to see that Mr. and Mrs. Josef Muscowski had not been married over 24 hours. It is one of the customs of the Polish people to keep the bride bedecked with blossoms and none were missing from the crown of Mrs. Muscowski, unless they were ruthlessly torn aside by the playful breezes as the train rattled along between Scottdale and this city. She was attended by a bridemaidher sister, by the way-who, in the light of beauty, would east her more fortunate sister in a very dark shade. But that had to pass, as the elder sister had captured a very dignified husband.

He was badly bruised about the body and it is feared received internal injuries. It is one of the rules of Polish etiquette that the bride and her maid must not separate for a full week, and the party was on the way from their home near Scottdale to spend the week's probation with friends. They arrived from Everson, where they were married, early in the evening, and were to have taken a train at 6:15. But an unfortunate thirst seized the entire party at the wrong moment, and while they sat in a neighboring saloon and quaffed the deicious beer, the train pulled out and left INSTEAD of "Mikado," at the Duquesne's matinee to-morrow, "The Bohemian Girl" the bridal party behind, compelling them to wait until 9:30 for a train. will be given by the Garrow Opera Com

That might have been because Josef was poor or there might have been other reasons, but that mattered not. So he brought the two daughters and the mother and sailed away leaving the disconsolate Josef, all but his heart and that the sweetheart had, at home with but little to do but think of the bride he had lost. But after a while he got a letter from his little girl, and was overloyed to know that she still thought of him in her far-away home in the land of milk and honey. So he decided that he too would try his fortunes in the new world, and about six months later Mr. Stensiloski was somewhat surprised and not at all pleased to see his daughter's lover standing at his door, with the afore mentioned daughter clasped in a loving embrace. He had serious objections to any such performance, but the stalwart Josef seemed to be rather enjoying the situation. When Josef came to this country he immediately went to the coke region, where his sweetheart lived with her father, and began work as a coke worker at the same works as his proposed father-in-law. Everything was moving nicely until the great coke strike came on, and when March arrived neither was working, so Josef had to tell his little girl that the wedding day must be postponed. He still had a little money, but like a true philosopher, he refused to tacale life for two with no work and poor prospects. Soon he found Mr. Stensiloski running short in his accounts, and suddenly his sweetheart seemed to find gold in most unconceivable places. In fact, she was a fairy godmother for her own father. At last the old gentleman found out where the cash was coming from. After a stern rebuke to the young man for being so free with his money, necessary for a man who is to keep a wife, he found that he no longer had any objections to such a noble fellow for a son-in-law.

That was a good while ago, but all decided that it was best to wait until they could repair their little fortunes after the strike closed. So they waited and wished for the day which was to make their happiness complete, and that day came yesterday in
