BORN TO RADICALISM.

Career of One of the Most Remarkable Congressmen of War Times.

HE WAS REGARDED AS A FANATIC.

Wanted Lincoln to Confiscate the Landed Estates of the South.

GEORGE W. JULIAN FROM INDIANA

[WRITTEN FOR THE DISPATCH.]

No history of the House of Representatives during the period of which I write would be complete without some notice of George W. Julian. Julian belonged to a class who have always been regarded opprobriously as "fanatics." There is a certain philosophy in fanaticism which has not been generally recognized. Fanaticism has its use and purpose in the world, which indeed could hardly get along without it. It is the fanatic who makes things move. The only trouble with him is that he is always in advance of his times. The world rarely comes up abreast with him, and yet without him would make little, if any, progress at all along the line of reform. Fanaticism is the fuel of the engine, needed to put it in motion, though perhaps not altogether a safe conductor to trust with the running of the train.

Julian had no sympathy with conservatism. He was a born radical, and had inherited an aversion to wrong in all its forms through a long line of Quaker ancestors. As Burdette says in his humorous biography of William Penn, "He was a man of peace, and determined to have it if it took a lifetime of contention and dispute to get it." This was Julian's fate. Like many others, he was the creature of heredity and circumstance, which he was powerless to control. He was carried forward on the path of life by a momentum that he did not create and was unable to resist, even if he had desired.

A STORMY POLITICAL CAREER.

Julian was born in Centerville, Ind., May 5, 1817; received a good common school education; spent three years in teaching, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1840; was a member of the Indiana Legislature and a representative in Congress from 1840 to 1851; was re-elected to the Thirty-seventh, Thirty-eighth, Thirty-ninth and Fortieth Congresses, during which time he served as a member of the Committee on the Conduct of the War—a rather strange assignment for a Quaker. Julian's political career was an exceptional one. He was one of the original Free Soil and Anti-Slavery men at a time and in the midst of influences that were not only not in sympathy, but fiercely antagonistic to his views, and it is a tribute to the remarkable character of the man that, almost single-handed, he was able to convert the majority of the people of his district to his way of thinking and to secure their support in his repeated canvasses for Congress.

He carried on the war against slavery at the risk of his life. He had not only to encounter the opposition of his political enemies but also that of members of his own party, among whom was Governor Morton, an acknowledged power in Indiana. No man was ever more bitterly denounced than Julian. The Indianapolis Journal declared that he had "the temper of a hedge-hog; the adhesiveness of a barnacle; the vindictiveness of a Corsican, the vanity of a peacock; the hypocrisy of Aminadab Sleek, and the duplicity of the devil." This was certainly not a very flattering picture. Julian took it all with unperturbed serenity, and seemed rather to enjoy it. "Nothing succeeds like success." And with success crowning every political contest he could well afford to laugh at the impotent rage and harmless vituperation of his enemies, and was well repaid for his labors in seeing the principles for which he so zealously and heroically contended at last become the settled policy of the whole country, and imbedded in its fundamental law.

HIS PUBLIC LAND LAW.

But opposition to slavery was not his only hobby. He not only believed in free men and free soil but also in free homes for free men. His attention was early directed to the public land system of the United States, of which he acquired a more complete knowledge perhaps than any man of his time. Appointed by Speaker Colfax to the Chairmanship of the Committee of Public Lands of the House he entered upon a congenial field of labor, and addressed himself with his usual energy and zeal to the improvement of the public land system, and especially to the securing of the enactment of the homestead law, which had, after a long contest, been enacted in a previous Congress but had been vetoed by Mr. Buchanan, because as was believed, it was distasteful to his southern friends, and which finally became a law, by the approval of President Lincoln on May 20, 1862. The Homestead bill as reported by Julian's committee was much mutilated in its passage through Congress, and shorn of a carefully guarded provision intended to prevent the public land from passing into the hands of speculators and corporations, and to preserve them exclusively for homes for American citizens. This mutilation Julian greatly deplored but was powerless to prevent, and the result he anticipated and predicted has come about in the wasteful squandering of empires of land by Congress.

Julian, as I have before indicated, was a radical of the supreme type. He believed in cutting down the tree instead of manuring it and digging about it and trying it a little longer to see if it would produce good fruit. He was impatient of Mr. Lincoln's conservatism in dealing with the rebellion, and though it required more drastic treatment.

HIS CURE FOR REBELLION.

He favored the confiscation of the landed estates of rebels as well as the abolition of slavery, believing that the former was the foundation and buttress of the latter, and reported a bill to confiscate such estates and then survey them in sections and subdivisions in accordance with the general land system, and bring them under the provision of the homestead law for the benefit of the landless poor of the South. In the advocacy of this measure he was participant in a rather remarkable scene. Mallory, of Kentucky, in the course of some remarks on the bill, said: "The census reports establish the fact that 36 per cent. of the colored population of the free states have white blood in their veins, while only one-ninth of the slave population show white blood."

Julian replied: "I have not examined the census tables as to the fact stated by the gentleman. It may be true, for I believe mulattoes more generally come into the Northern States than those of the darker color, and of course their increase will be mulattoes. The gentleman is not at all relieved, however, by the white blood in the veins of these negroes in the North, for they have emigrated from the South, bringing with them, perhaps, the blood of the gentleman from Kentucky and other distinguished leaders of his party."

The next day, on the report of the debate appearing in the Congressional Globe, Mallory rose on a question of personal privilege and claimed that the allusion to him personally by Julian, as reported, was not made by Julian in his speech, but had been interpolated by him in his revision of the reporter's notes prior to their being printed, and called a number of his fellow-Democrats, who stated unequivocally that they had given close attention to Julian's remarks, and were quite sure that he had not used the words.

JULIAN PROVED HIS POINT.

Julian replied that he had spoken in debate the exact words complained of, and called a number of his Republican friends to corroborate him. This left the matter in grave doubt, though the preponderance was in Julian's favor, being positive as opposed to negative testimony. Julian, however, was not satisfied until he looked up the reporter's notes, which, fortunately for him, contained the very words in question. This settled it, and Mallory "took the water" as gracefully as was possible for a Kentuckian, though it is probable that "it astonished his stomach mightily," and made the amplest apology for his mistaken accusation.

What Better Way to Obtain Knowledge Than by the Aid of That Grand Monument to Man's Intellectuality,

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA  BRITANNICA?

HISTORY AND GROWTH.—The ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA was the original, and is the model which all others have essayed to copy. As it was the first, so it ever was, is now, and probably ever will be, THE STANDARD. The success of the First Edition was such as to prove to the Publishers its true importance and the desirability of a more comprehensive scheme than at first adopted; and its reception inspired them quickly to revise and enlarge it. Obedient to the demands of the literary world, it has appeared in NINE editions, with several Supplements, as follows:

First Edition; in Three Volumes, in 1771.

Second Edition; in Ten Volumes, 1778-1783.

Third Edition; in Eighteen Volumes, 1788-1793. Supplement; in Two Volumes, 1801.

Fourth Edition; in Twenty Volumes, 1801-1810.

Fifth Edition; in Twenty Volumes, 1817; Supplement; in Six Volumes, 1816-1824.

Sixth Edition; in Twenty Volumes, 1820-1823.

Seventh Edition; in Twenty Volumes, 1830-1842.

Eighth Edition; in Twenty-one Volumes including Index, 1853-1861.

Ninth Edition; in Twenty-five Volumes, and Five Volumes American Supplement, in all Thirty Volumes; 1875-1891.

The completion of the last edition enabled the public to measure this mighty work, and the verdict places it beyond the possibility of rivalry.

OVER 1,500 CONTRIBUTORS. THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA has received contributions from more than 1,500 authors; their names embrace the most eminent scholars in Great Britain, America, Germany, France, Italy, Scandinavia, and every other part of the civilized world. The BRITANNICA furnishes the amplest means to guide the inquirer to an independent opinion on the subjects that most profoundly agitate the human mind, and concerning which men are most anxious to be informed. Including the supplement in contains OVER 24,000 PAGES.

The immense variety, and the profound learning of the text in this work, amounting to over 24,000 pages, places it beyond comparison with all other books of reference in the English language. Of all the works of reference now in the market, any intelligent person will see that the ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA is the greatest. It contains over 8,000 ILLUSTRATIONS.

Other Cyclopedias have been sold, not because they were preferred, but because the price of the BRITANNICA placed it beyond reach. At $1.50 per volume it is the cheapest set of books in the world, and can be afforded by every family.

This Encyclopædia Britannica is the greatest ATLAS in the WORLD. It contains OVER 700 MAPS, which are referred to and described in the text and with which they are in perfect harmony. This includes all of the latest maps of the American States and Territories.

AGENTS WANTED.

COMPARISON OF SIZE.—The following comparison of amounts of type required, and prices of other great works, is by Prof. A. P. Lyon, of New York, in the "Electrotype Journal":

The Bible contains 3,500,000 "ems" of type.
Webster's Dictionary, 20,000,000 ems.
Chamber's Cyclopedia, 48,000,000 ems.
Johnson's Cyclopedia, 56,000,000 ems.
Appleton's Cyclopedia, 60,000,000 ems.
ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA, 140,00,000 ems.

COMPARISON OF COST.—No other has spent one-third as much money on literary labor as the BRITANNICA. Not one has given $10,000 for a single article, or $600 a page for written matter, as it has given. The Ninth Edition cost over one million and five hundred thousand dollars, and represents the labors of over 2,000 specialties and contains 25,000 subjects with 250,000 indexed references.

This work is pre-eminently the Encyclopædia for our country and generation. Everyone that reads, everyone that mingles in society, is constantly meeting with allusions to subjects on which he needs and desires further information, while few have the time to grope among a hundred different works for the requisite knowledge, and, moreover, in a country like ours, where the humblest may be called to positions of trust, requiring intelligence and general information, the value of such a work cannot be overestimated.

The Encyclopædia Britannica Appeals to All.

To the parent, because upon them more than upon all others is placed the responsibility of surrounding the young mind with the right kind of influences; they can, by a little personal effort, inculcate in their children a desire for more extended knowledge of the natural sciences, and by an occasional reading to them from the Britannica, incite in them an inclination to know more of it, and thus lead them toward a real practical education—more practical often than they will obtain at their regular studies.

To the student it appeals, for at no time in life is it so essential that the impressions made upon the mind and character shall be the most correct and of the highest order as during student life.

To the teacher it appeals, for in the thousands of perplexing questions which present themselves, requiring research, the Britannica will render it easy to obtain all the information required, besides offering something new and valuable at every turn of the page.

To the artisan it appeals, for every trade there is stored within the Britannica a very mine of valuable information. Every artisan will make himself more valuable and every mechanic will command better wages by using his spare time in the study of these books. He will obtain ideas that will be of constant assistance to him.

To the professional man, the literary man, we would say if there is a man among you who does not realize the great importance of possessing the Britannica, permit us to send you a volume of the work for your examination, and we feel confident that your name will appear among the thousands of your professional brethren buyers of the Britannica.

The following is a partial list of buyers of the Encyclopædia Britannica in Pittsburg and vicinity, among which will be found names prominent in every vocation. And we have no hesitation in declaring that ALL will substantiate the testimony of one who writes us: I would not be without this grand work for its weight in gold.
