

BOUNDLESS ICE SEAS

And Endless Fields of Snow Encountered by Alaskan Explorers.

PROF. RUSSELL'S EXPERIENCES.

River After River of Ice Water Bordered by the Little Party.

THE GREEN COUNTRY ALONG THE COAST

FROM A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27.—Prof. Russell, who was one of the chief figures in the exploring expedition which has for some time been in the regions of eternal snow and ice of Mt. St. Elias, has just returned to his Washington home, hale and hearty, after his perilous Alaskan trip.

The expedition started out with a disaster which was sufficiently appalling to have disconcerted any but the most determined of geographers.

So tremendous was the surf that it took three days to finally effect a landing. Some of the provisions and instruments were lost in the boat, although most of them were washed ashore and recovered.

Along the coast, Prof. Russell said, is a green country, covered with a profuse vegetation, but a few days' march inland brings the adventurous traveler to the snow line.

Two o'clock in the morning was the time usually chosen for starting to climb the mountain, because then it was the coldest and the avalanches were not so frequently falling, loosened by the melting rays of the sun.

The highest camp was pitched at 8,000 feet above the sea level, and from that point the Professor and his men made a tremendous effort to reach the summit.

The great obstacle to climbing was always the snow, which fell almost incessantly, rendering progress impracticable. At one time a snow storm came on when Prof. Russell was alone at the highest point, and for four entire days he was cut off from his companions.
