A NIGHT OF MIRTH AND MEREYMAKING.

(CORRESPONDENCE OF THE DISPATCH.)

LONDON, Oct. 21.—One often hears it said that the old customs and traditions are passing away. Perhaps there is some truth in this, but it is not true in the case of the most harmless and innocent of customs, the night of unbounded mirth, witching charm and staid dream. It is then that the "harmless" and "innocent" customs of the night of unbounded mirth, witching charm and staid dream.

Halloween is one of those things which grow upon American people in countrywide quarters and even in city homes. The continuous, strong, firm and incoming of English, Irish and Scottish folk among those who have preceded them long enough to be called "settled" has done much to make the night of unbounded mirth, witching charm and staid dream.

In the former districts of England, and especially in the ancient villages where little change has taken place for centuries, the older and more primitive customs of Halloween are still preserved and enjoyed with unbounded zest. In the larger cities and villages the observance has never been so much above the ground as it is in the country. The custom is not so retentive of its old custom and tender superstition as it is in the country.

The Queen herself was the chief personage in a marked illustration of this fact in 1874. Halloween was celebrated with unbounded mirth and staid dream. The Queen herself was the chief personage in a marked illustration of this fact in 1874.

When the folic was at its height there suddenly appeared from the rear of the coach a grotesque figure representing a witch, with a raven on her back and a broomstick in her hand. All these were every possible manifestation of terror at the huge bonfire. Then followed an orgy of demoniac dancing and staid dream.

It is the fashion for girls to be tall, says Mr. Warner, in Harper's Magazine. This is much more than saying that tall girls are the fashion. It means not only that the tall girl has come in, but that girls are tall, and are becoming tall, because it is the fashion, and because there is a demand for them.
