A growing manufacturing and residence city out the A. V. R. R., BUT A SHORT RIDE FROM UNION STATION. You will find a beautifully laid out city, with wide streets, that are perfectly sewered and graded. Water pipes are laid and supplied from never-failing springs. The fact of always having pure water in a locality means the preservation of health, and is of the most importance to the household. Kensington since last June has grown from nothing to a population now of over 1,000 people, and is daily increasing. Already over 200 houses have been built and are occupied, and building is going on over all the new city. Those who visit it can see at once that everything indicates its future prosperity. It is now a thriving busy little city; a number of its manufactories are being operated and giving employment to a large number. Families are moving there daily into their own homes as fast as completed. No better place could be selected to START A BUSINESS. When the 15 manufactories which are located there are running, the new city will have-a population of 10,000 people, which will make a big demand for everything sold by the merchant. The demand will be large and · permanent, which means riches to those who have stores there. No new town or city was ever laid out in this State with such a promising future as

The propensity of traveling men for perpetrating jokes is well known. All the latest ones originate with them. L. S. Pauseraft, who is sojourning in the city this week, is responsible for the latest. Among his many accomplishments is that of being able to imitate anyone's signature. For a group of admiring friends he dashed off with apparent ease the well-known sig-natures of Mora, Sardony, E. M. Gotthold,

John Hancock and others. He said that recently he was in Charles-ton, S. C., and did not have a cent. He went to the manager of a hoiel, and asked for a small loan until his remittance arrived. The gentleman said, "Certainly, $50, if you need it. Just come into the office," I tollowed him in," said Mr. Paulscroft, "and he wrote me a check. Upon receiving it, I said: If you will give me a blank ebeck, I will bet you a new hat that I can duplicate this genuine one, and get the money on it at the bank, provided you do and 8.25 to the square foot not notify the bank to stop payment." "One of the most terriffic fights I ever saw," said George Holland, a horseman at the Union depot last evening, "was between a stallion and a bull dog. It occurred on a ranch in Wyoming. The poor horse was no match for the brute, and was soon killed before the stable hands could rescue him. The dog was sitting near the stable door, when the stallion playfully nipped him as he passed by. The bull was in a bad humor, and quick as a flash sprang at the horse, and buried his teeth in the stallion's shoulder. o the Editor of the Pitisburg Leader

To the Editor of the Pittsburg Leader: I do not own a newspaper, and for that reason it is impossible for me to publish in detail the reason why each case undisposed of during my six years as District Attorney remained untried. In some cases the par-ties or witnesses were dead; in others it was impossible to procure the attendance of witnesses; in many cases the defendants forfeited their bail, and in many cases the defendants were never arrested. Many in-dictments were merely duplicates of or an-other form of charging offenses, on which new indictments the defendants were tried, and many were indictments which were de-MONONGAHELA-L. H. An examination of the records will show that the administration of the will show that the administration of the late R. H. Johnston, Esq., was no exception to this rule, and no man has any doubt of his honesty and devotion to duty. In this connection I may add that almost all of the Weigh yourgoods—family scales.....1 connection I may add that almost all of the 115 larceny cases said to have been held over from the June sessions, 1887, were larceny cases against employes of the Pan-handle Railroad Company. In these cases R. H. Johnston, Esq., and the late Hon. John H. Hampton were private counsel for the prosecution. A few of the cases were tried and the ring-leaders in the robberies were convicted. Messrs. Johnston and Hampton then informed the court that they believed convicted. Messrs. Johnston and Hampton then informed the court that they believed the ends of justice had been attained; that the remaining defendants were young men who had been misled, and that to convict and sentence them could do no good. The witnesses in these cases had to be brought from all parts of the United States, at enor-mous expense to the county, and their at-tendance could not be compelled by process. The Court, Judge Collier on the bench, agreed with the private counsel; and the cases went over. None of the defendants ever asked for a trial, nor have I ever heard of one of them being charged with crime since that time.

of one of them being charged with erime since that time. or fielle contendere and were never called for sentence, the number and terms of the indictments being given, any person who knows anything about the records in the office of the Clerk of Courts can examine them and in half an hour convince himself that the statement published in the Leader is not reliable and is untrue. The defen-dants were called for sentence, many of them were scually sentenced on the very indictment specified, many of them forfeited their bail, and process was issued for them to the Sheriff. Some of them had sentence suspended by the Judge who heard the case, and some of them were notually acquitted by the jury instead of being convicted. The man who published that statement in the Evening Leader could not have examined the record or had it examined by competent persons. I need instance only one case, that against the notorious Daisy Moore, at No. 271, March sessions, 1884. She was actually sentenced by Judge Ewing to pay a fine of $100 and to be committed nine months to the workhouse, and this is plainly statements as glaring as this are shown by the records, but it is unnecessary to particu-larize.
