THE PROSPERITY OF THE YOUNG CITY

A few weeks since there were published in THE DISPATCH excerpts from the first Pittsburg directory issued in 1815, a year before the incorporation of the city. It was a mirror of the then pretentious borough in which were found many characteristics of the present city. Mr. William L. Jones, of Fourth avenue, who is a virtuoso, and when not taking fire risks is on the alert to gather in rare old books, has a copy of the Pittsburg directory for the year 1826.

So far as is known by people of to-day this was the second compilation of the kind, though the author speaks of one of 1819, and in his preface suggests that the growth of the city demands another, though he sadly asks "Who reads an American book," and evidently feared that his effort would be still-born. The compiler was a lawyer as was the pioneer in this line, Mr. Riddle, and, like Riddle, also became a judge in time.

Said the People Were Degenerate.

There are some portions of this American book that would interest almost any reader. Like his predecessor, Mr. Jones evidently intended that his directory should in addition be a compendium of facts necessary to constitute a well-informed Pittsburger, and he gives his opinion of his to-be patrons in n blunt, candid way calculated either to utterly repel or to attract them. After givdwells on the degeneration of the people of the time. He laments that people in the ordinary walks of life who had acquired a ompetence by hard knocks and shrewdness ad their heads turned and almost every family aspired to produce a lawyer, doctor or clergyman, so that these professions were fast being filled by wooder, heads.

Fashion had substituted for the simple, healthful society and pastimes of the vilage, the hot-house exoties of pretension, and women had became so designing and and women had became so designing and mercenary that there was danger that the male population would nearly all die batchelors. The time had come when people were estimated socially according to the length of their purses. The chivalry that had distinguished society in the uncontaminated time when tone was given it by Generals O'Hara, Neville and Wilkins, had dispersed and in their stead were left a general section. appeared and in their stead were left a generation of money getters. In the village state the social virtues had been household gods, but in 1826 their alters were consecrated to Mammon.

Complains of the Lawyers,

According to Judge Jones the bar had According to Judge Jones the bar had also degenerated. Judges Addison, Rob-erts and Wilkins all came up to the author's standard and Lawyers James Ross, Woods, Collins, Campbell, Mountain and Henry Baldwin he says would have shone at any bar in Christendom, but among their suc cossors he only recognizes among the 25 or Biddle as of the caliber of their predeces Sors.

Judge Jones evidently did not write for ephemeral fame, for he characterizes his fellow citizens as very litigious for a churchgoing city, and deplores the expense of maintaining the Quarter Sessions Court, while he says the Mayor's Court was largely occupied in settling the disputes of the col-ored people. He criticised the architecture of the city, and says the only edifice in it worthy of mention was Trinity Church, an engraving of which forms the frontispied of the directory. It was drawn by Rev. J. Hopkins, subsequently bishop of the Episoopal diocese.

Low Selaries and Bad Government. In 1826 John M. Snowden was Mayor, sainry $200 a year; Ephraim Pentland, Re-corder, salary $600 a year; Treasurer, Willinm Graham, salary $150; Street Commissioner, William Crawford, salary $200; Wharfmaster, Florence Cotter, salary one-third of receipts. The city abounded in nuisances, such as filthy streets, foul smells, unlicensed swine and inefficient police, and the only street lamps were the few that twinkled over tavern doors, but the people reveled in anticipation of the good time coming, when the water works, National Armory and the grand canals should be completed. Judge Jones asks:

completed. Judge Jones asks:

What have we gained by our growth in wealth and population, in manufactures, trade and all other things, compared with the artiess manners and delightful amusements which we have lost? Chartered as we are by an act of Assembly, as a city corporation, do we have the real unfashionable contentment with which our village predecesors were blossed? Where are our pleasant social tea drinkings; our sturdy blind-man's buff, our evening chit-chat, in which both sexes participated, without a thought of visiting cards, making calls or preconcerted "accidentals?" Where are the strawberry lunnings the unclassed balls; the charming promenades, of which all partook with light hearts, and careless of fashionable ceremonies?

No Places of Amusement.

Now we have no places of even fashionable resort, or rather, places which polite and fashionable people frequent; where pleasure might be sought and found, or where the useful could be mingled with the agreeable. Many of us are, as a direct consequence, often sadly at a loss how to dis-pose of a leisure hour, which, by the bye, seidon breaks in upon the engagements of any other class of our population, than that of the lawyers, who are said to sleep out the of the lawyers, who are said to sleep out the transitions, or the physicians, who are sometimes during unfortunate seasons of general health, compelled to lay aside their lancets for lack of argument. There would be an utter deficiency of classical shades and temples of literature and science were it not for the nominal existence of the University of Western Pennsylvania, on the corner of Thind street and Cherry alley. It possesses a very respectable faculty, the greatest proportion of whom, however, sedom fill their respective chairs. In addition to this distinguished seat of learning, there are numerical private seminaries where reading, writing and other ordinary branches of education are floorishing: a few debating societies and the nucleus of a law society. edirection are flourishing: a few debating societies and the nucleus of a law society. The novels of "Great Unknown" and Cooper are read by all reading ladies and gentlemen whenever they can be obtained. But as we have no other circulating library except that styled the "Apprentices," and the boczeciers do not cater very liberally for the lovers of light reading, the latest and best works that come to us are few, and have to accommodate so many becrowers that they grow old long before their admirrs can peruse them. No public reading room is open for the reception of those who might prefer a literary lounge or rational enjoyment to the orgies of the gaming table and the social, though more sensual, pleasures of the tayern. All attempts to establish such an institution have been unavaillish such an institution have been unavail-ing, probably because our bootian atmosphere is neverse to all intellectual improvement and fatal to literary taste, or because the more substantial and lucrative avocations have deprived our citizens of all inclination for pursuits merely mental. Sunday Was a Duil Day.

No public garden within the city, or its environs, affords a retreat from the drudgery of business, the heat of the sun, or the smoke of the chimneys. The only temple dedicated to histrionic representations is the diminutive, wretched and woe-begone edifice in Third streot, now rarely occupied, except by itinerant sleight-of-hand professors and rope dancers. It is entirely unsuitable for the residence of Thaiin and Melpomene. Sunday is a fearfully long and wearisome day for the most of us. They win do not choose to attend one of our numerous churches; who cannot afford a canter on horseback, or pay for a seat in a hack as far as the Arsenal, Gillespie's, or Noodle Doosey, must be content to promenade the streets, saunter to the banks of the Monongahela; to view the steamboats; stroll across one of the bridges, or climb the hills that look down so invitingly upon us.

According to Joseph Barelay's consust the No public garden within the city, or its

According to Joseph Barelay's census the population of Pittsburg proper was 10,515, of which 2,303 were of foreign birth, 424 col-ored, excess of males 91, Kensington (Pipe-town) 329, Birmingham, 459; Northern Libtown) 329, Birmingham, 459; Northern Liberties, 711; Allegheny Town, 702; total, 12,976; excess of females, 108; foreigners, 2,863. There were 85 houses in Allegheny Town, 13 of which were brick, and 2,147 houses in Pittsburg and all of its suburbs. Pittsburg and all of its suburbs.

First Nail Making Machines.

As a manufacturing center Pittsburg be gan to attract attention in 1810, and in 1826 people marveled at the success of the patent nail making machines, which were taking the bread out of the mouths of those who followed the old style of fabrication, though that year there were 1,800 tons turned out by the ancient process. Salt manufacture had begun to be important. A few years previous, when brought from the seaboard on the backs of horses and mules, it sold in Pittsburg at $14 a barrel, but in 1826, the price had tallen to $1.25 per barrel. The manufactured products of Pittsburg were

Lots of Distilleries Then.

In Allegheny county there were 79 grist mills, 65 saw mills, 130 distilleries, but four of which were in Pittsburg, 21 tanyards, 10 carding machines, 13 fulling mills, 15 oil and chopping mills and 3 breweries, the latter all in Pittsburg. The distilleries yielded 125,000 gallons of whisky, so its cost to the consumer was less than 50 cents a gallon. The estimation in which whisky ing a topographical description of the city,

Mr. S. has devoted much time and attention to this business, so much so, that he is now engaged in making a new beverage as a competitor of the Tuscaloosa, to which he has given the inspiring and beautiful name of "Pure Rock Water," or in the language of the last of the Mohicaus, "Real Tallyvally Cord." This is an admirable liquor, blending with the mildness of milk all the sparkling vivacity of champagne. It steals gently upon the senses, like music upon the soul, and animates the intellect without ever collapsing an idea.

An Farly Idea of Protection.

The city's imports were $2,119,000, excity, $662,276. This showing, however, did not satisfy Judge Jones, who was an ardent tariff man, and he advised the people either to themselves make articles of luxury er do without them. The balance-of-trade theory had a strong hold on his mind. The cost of carriage of goods between Pittsburg and Atlantic ports in 1826 was $30 a ton, which greatly impeded the attempt of our grand-fathers to get on the right side in the matter of the balance of trade.

In 1815 Pittsburg had turned out four steamboats In 1826 she had 48, costing $495,000; tonnage 8,624. Horses were still unnumbered. An attempt had been made to get Councils to move in the matter, but it was abortive and Judge Jones suggested that councilmen should be paid $1 a day for their services, or given a hot supper after each day's work as an incentive to get them te perform their duties.

Didn't Stop to Classify.

In Judge Jones' directory the christian names of the inhabitants are not given al-phabetically and if you want to find William Robinson, for instance, you must look hap-hazard through all the Robinsons enumerated. There was a considerable sprink-ling of nobility, all of whom are distinguished as gent or gentlewoman. Among the former is found Robert Peebles and among the latter Mary and Matilda Pride and Susan Pentland.

It was located "opposite the ruins of our late Imperial residence and the Ancient Temple of Innocence, a few doors north of Solomon Lightcap's Crackloo Wagon Tavern, alias the Lion's Den."

HEROES OF THE SIGNAL SERVICE

Is Shown by Documents in Possession of a Pittsburger

WHO BECAME QUITE NOTED IN THE WORK

The value of the signal service during the war of the rebellion has not been generally understood and valued according to its merit. Commanding Generals were largely dependent upon the signal service reports. The dispatch of some humble sergeant, made from the top of a tree, often determined the movement of the army. The signal service man reported every step taken by the enemy to the minutest details, which determined the course of the Union troops, just as in the game of chess one player is governed by the moves of his op-

One of the best known and most useful signal service officers in the late war was Dr. Henry W. Fulton, of the East End, Pittsburg. His services were repeatedly recognized in the official reports of commanding officers. A reporter for THE DIS-PATCH called upon the Doctor at his home, at Penn and Highland avenues, yesterday. It was a great treat to look over his valuable collection of war relies. But the most interesting thing was to read various dis-patches in his memorandum book, made at the most critical period of the war, during the campaign around Petersburg. The dispatches were made mid the bursting of bombs and the whiz of the sharp shooters' bullets, often cutting uncomfortably close to Sergeant Fulton. Some of these dis-patches are given to illustrate the nature and value of the signal service.

His Term of Service. Dr. Fulton entered 'the army in April, 1861, at the beginning of the war, and was mustered out, by expiration of his term of service, in October, 1864. He enlisted as a private soldier, first in the three months service and subsequently in the Fifty-third Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, Colonel Brook's command. In December, 1861, the doctor was transferred to the signal service in which, denortment he served until vice, in which department he served until discharged. He was connected with the headquarters of every general commanding the Army of the Potomac, from McClelland to Meade A good specimen of the orders under which young Sergeant Fulton acted, is fur-nished in the following, issued by Major Fisher, chief of the signal service under Major General Meade:

Major General Meade:
Sergeant Fulton:
You must assume control of all parties at your station and sign all reports. I will hold you responsible for the good working of the station. Keep a man at the glass from daylight until dark. Report every indication of a movement, taking care to carry no information but that of which you are certain. Your reports have been very good.

This order virtually of promotion was issued under circumstances the doctor's modesty will not permit to be related. Among his documents Dr. Fulton has a manifold copy of a dispatch which reads as follows: Sergeant Fulton.
The General commanding would like to

Some Perilons Experiences. The doctor often passed through perilous experiences. Upon one occasion when in the top of a tree two batteries of the enemy opened fire upon him. He saw all the preliminary movement distinctly, loading the cannon, aiming and applying the fire, and even the smoke, all before the shells reached him. At last when the sharpshooters began to cut the twigs of the tree all about him, Sergeant Fulton thought it prudent to be-take himself for a time to the pit at the foot of the tree. The signal service men always went with The signal service men always went with light equipments, each man having but a sword and revolver. Other signal service equipments, rations and extra baggage were carried in light spring wagons. Owing to its peculiar character, the signal service was allowed, by special order or General McClellan, and subsequent commanders to draw rations from any quartermaster or supply wagon in sight. The signal service was practically given the right of way under all circumstances.
