A Westerner Has a Very Strange Sunday Night Experience

IN THE COMPANY OF A BAD CROOK.

The Housebreaker Asks Him to Assist in a nefarious Job.

HIS SAD STORY RELATED TO A REPORTER

How a stranger might have been accidentally implicated in a crime was illustrated in a story told by Oliver S. Backus, a young man interested in the Little Nugget mines near Denver, Col., last night.

He stopped over last Sunday in Pittsburgh on his way to New York, and being of a wild Western spirit concluded to go out after dark and enjoy himself as best he could.

Being accustomed to the Sunday night openness of free and easy resorts so common in Denver, he started out expecting to enjoy himself listening to an alleged sacred concert, and putting away copious quantities of liquid refreshments.

After finishing, Mr. Backus said he guessed that the rigid laws on Sunday closing handicapped him considerably and it was even betting he would not get a drink at all.

In his wanderings he met a gentleman whom he asked if he could direct him to some locality or place where a drink of the Teutonic beverage could be obtained.

Afraid He Was Being Banked.

The newly-made friend was well dressed and seemingly well acquainted with the city.

He was a good talker, and his conversation was on subjects of general interest, such as manufactures and the large resources which Pittsburgh had for improving itself.

He deplored the fact that his Sunday days were so uninviting to the stranger who had just arrived in the city.

They went to an all-night house on Wood street, where they satisfied their appetites, and after finishing, Mr. Backus said he guessed he would go to his hotel—the Schlosser.

The two walked slowly down Fifth avenue, when the stranger, who had before made himself agreeable, stopped several times before big business houses and looked curiously at the windows, doors, etc.

Mr. Backus how easy it would be to enter any of the houses which were through Fifth avenue.

Virginia alley. The Westerner didn't pay much attention to his companion's observation, but the latter pressed the subject, and quite sounded Mr. Backus as to his plans and nerve.

This question rather startled the young man from Denver, who realized he was in company with a desperate crook, and was not afraid of any personal injury, but the fact of his being seen with the possible criminal disturbed him quite a little.

It was now nearly 1 o'clock in the morning. The city was all quiet except from the rattling noise of the heavy street sweepers. He starts out determined to get proof to clear himself if any store was robbed that night, and his new friend arrested for the crime.

He went back to the restaurant where a number of newspaper men were gathered eating their after-labor lunch.

He talked with the proprietor until broad daylight. "It was a long night's talk," said Mr. Backus, "but I was bound to prove an alibi by that restaurant keeper if any connection with that sleek gentleman's record for that one night. I have been keeping the experience to myself, not intending to divulge it, but I tell it to you just to show how a man may be thrown against circumstances in the daily walks of life which might land him behind the bars."

The chances are many innocent people are convicted on less circumstantial evidence than that I have just related. Mr. Backus went to New York last night on the fast line.

It is said there are a few crooks in town, and it has only been a night or so ago when a burglar alarm was sent in to the police from a very prominent wholesale jewelry house on Fifth avenue.

A COUGH is a lurking enemy that should be dislodged by Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, 25 cents.
