IN THE SOCIAL SWIM.

The Woodland Wild as Discovered Yesterday in the Auditorium

TO AID THE SOUTHSIDE HOSPITAL.

Pennsylvania College Girls Practice Physical Expression.

T. M. C. A. IN PROSPEROUS CONDITION

At 10 o'clock vesterday morning no thoroughfare in Pittsburg was a busier sight than was the Auditorium. Several hundred women were there, besides a few men, getting in readiness the machinery that was to put in motion the benefit for the Southside Hospital. When the florists vacated the Auditorium last Saturday they left behind them the prettily arranged ceiling of autumn branches and evergreens and some of their potted chrysanthemums. This made a novel woodland scene. Looking at it in the evening it was not difficult to imagine that the mart, busy with people and traffic, had sprung up by magic, or obedient to the call of the genii of Alladin's lamp. And it was magic, but only the magic of the nineteenth century hard work earlier in the day. Then two sides of the room were lined with the skeletons of the booths for the sale of everything that comes within the rather wide compass of a charitable fair. The women flew about, and so did the girls, and their tongues were all flying, as well as the hammers, whose taps could be heard in every direction.

Arranging the Decorations.

The country store was standing vacant in one corner and the goods for it were piled up in another corner. The famous Miss Flora McFlimsy was nowhere to be seen, but her trunk, perched high on a box, was the subject of much comment and inquiry. A shrub, which in the evening bursts into more wonderful fruitage than ever adorned a Christmas tree, was lying on its side, not being even planted, to say nothing of bearing. The hut of the fortune teller had no canvas on it, but was only a framework. Everything was in embryo. But stout hearts, willing fingers whose owners never once winced though these same fingers were struck by the hammers as often as were the heads of the tacks; and a few cool heads, these were the genii of the lamp, and from these sprung the magic that trans-formed the Auditorium by evening.

By 7 o'clock the Auditorium was ready for the public and people began to arrive in little parties until the hall was fairly well

Not a Place to Save Money

The skeleton frames of the booths of the morning were now in all the glory of gay cheese cloth; and the busy workwomen were become demure shop girls, whose business it was with their bright eyes to lure every man or woman who came their way into their net. One's purse came out at the door and it never left one's hand until one got it to the door again. Flower girls insisted upon your buying flowers. Candy girls, as delicious bits of confectionery as as their own sweetmeats, drew you to them as their own sweetmeats, drew you to them as the flower draws the honey. Two old Gypsies read your hand upon your crossing their's with silver and told you a "fair fortune and no favor." Miss Flora McFlimsy held an at home, the in-vitations to which took the form of a five cent piece and women like thered cent piece, and womau-like showed you all her wardrobe, which somebody declared equaled in completeness those of either of the coming brides of the week. Baby Ruth the coming brides of the week. Baby Ruth Cleveland lay in her cot indifferent to the fact that she was miles away from her own mother, and that a cruel world was bidding for her at 10 cents a bid. Bennie McKee, in a handsome black velvet suit, sat at Baby Ruth's feet and apparently found the Auditorium in Pitts-bur as much to big libra as White H burg as much to his liking as White House in Washington.

er Case for Agent Dean.

Probably because it was a first night, the old woman in the shoe acted in a very un-dignified fashion, and was actually seen climbing out of her shoe. A little later she was found eating an ice, while her poor deserted children were trying to keep warm by huddling together in the tip of the shoe and curling its tongue around them for a blanket. Dinner was not served yesterday but begins to-day at 11 o'clock. The menu for it is milk. In the evening there will be an equally appetizing supper from 5 to 8 o'clock. The Southside ladies will be in charge to-day and to-morrow.

IT is rather pleasant to learn that the discouraging accounts rife about the Young Woman's Christian Association are hardly Woman's Christian Association are hardly correct. To-day the association comes into possession of its new quarters, a portion a house opposite the Pittsburg Club, where the Secretary, Miss Devoe, will at once be established. One of the officers said yester-day in conversation: "The young women of these cities are certainly worth as much as the young men, and we all know what our business men have done for the Young the voung men, and we all know what our business men have done for the Young Men's Christian Association. I have not the slightest doubt but that they will do the same for the young women, when called upon to do so. They will soon be given an opportunity to assist us finan-cially. We need $5,000 for the first year to have the work properly begun. The first gentleman I asked gave me a very Mberal contribution and said he thought we were very modest indeed in only thought we were very modest indeed in only asking for $5,000, and that he was sure we would get $25,000 if we needed it."

Alderman McMasters Holds L. L. Satler and i., D. Straus in $10,000 Bail.

Detective P. J. Murphy, of the National Detective Agency, has been, through Louis Moeser, creating a considerable stir in the lumber business during the past few days. Moeser, who does business on Smithfield street, on his own behalf, states that in January, 1890, L. L. Satler and L. D. Straus, of the Pittsburg Lumber Company, induced him to go into their company, hav-ing, as he alleges, doctored their books and misrepresented their business to be a paying
