sister of Horace Greeley. I took a fancy to the boy and he to me. He came here to live, he said, to be near me. Albert was as generous as a prince. He gave costly suppers and spent his money without stint. He would bring me roses costing 22 apiece."

"Did he spend all his time in social frivolities?" I asked.

"Oh, no," said Mrs. Wilde. "He spent all his time with me. Tommy Russell (Little Lord Fauntleroy) and I were his dearest friends. He wore our picture in a minature locket hung around his neck. Of course he was one of those girl boys, and he wanted to be near me all the time. The girls worshiped him, but he told me that he did not care for them and that he had never kissed a girl in his life."

He Gave His Soul to Mephisto.

slave, as "Thou fairy with the green eyes," and passionately writes: "Come, Mephisto, give me my love; my soul is thine to torture as thou wilt." Included in the book are a number of poems, some of which are good. It contains a total of 100 verses.

A dispatch from New York states that Mrs. Frank Leslie was interviewed at her apartments at the Gerlach just after she had returned from a dinner party.

His Poetic Tendencies Were Noticed.

"Yes," she said, "I knew that misgnided young man very well. In fact, I received a letter from him to-day telling me of his conviction and speaking in a hopeless way of his future. Even now if it were possible I would aid him. He came to me about four years ago with a letter of introduction from the daughter of Horace Greeley. He had other letters, and it was generally supposed that he was very wealthy. In fact he was thought to be a millionaire. His father and mother were both dead, and he took apartments here at the Gerlach. The difference in our ages was such that no one would suppose that he wanted to marry me, and I saw a great deal of him. He lived in a very expensive way and attended my receptions regularly. He was a handsome boy, well-mannered and evidently of good family. Frequently he dined with me. He had remarkable musical talent, and I don't think I ever heard a young man who had a better touch of the piano. He also wrote some verses cleverly, but not good enough for publication. He became a most deyoted friend of little Tommy Russell, who played Little Lord Fauntieroy, and they were together constantly.

"Finally he came to me one day, about

"Finally he came to me one day, about two years ago, and said: "Mrs. Leslie, the sorrow of my life has come. I have lost an important lawsuit and I must cut down my important lawsuit and I must cut down my expenses. I want you to loan me some money.' I told him that I had taken a vow never to loan a man money. I could give it to him, but if he took it he would fall in my estimation. He said that he would never accept it as a gift. Finally, however, I did loan him money, about $250, I think. He was a brilliant boy, but he was unable to turn his genius to account. For a time he had a minor part at Daily's Theater. He became addicted to absinthe, however, and he filled his head with the worst class of French novels. It ruined him. So far as I knew, he had been up to that time a very exemplary young man. He was passionately fond of Tommy Russell.' She Read His Diary and Was Sorry.

"Have you his diary that he had when arrested?" asked the reporter. "I have read it," answered Mrs. Leslie,

"but I have not got it now. When he was arrested this diary was sent to me. After I had read it I returned it to the police. It was unspeakable. The diary was dedicated to Tommy Russell, to read when he became 21 years old. Its contents showed that the young man's brain had been weakened by absinthe, and it was filled with the ideas that he had gathered from his French novels. I think there was a poem in it dedicated to me, in which he accused me of triding with a bov's heart or something equally absurd. When I read that diary I thought that he should be punished. I feel sorry for him now, however, and if I could help him I would. I sent an agent to see if he could aid him in any way. I learned that even if this present charge were withdrawn there were others that would be brought against him. My name has been coupled with his in a very annoying way. He was only a boy, in whom I was interested as I would be in any other young man who came to me recommended as he did." but I have not got it now. When he was Hope's diary gives a full description of his rapid life. In it he tells how he made the acquaintance of Mrs. Leslie, and frequent allusion is made to her in his diary as one whom he had wronged. The ruin of his life, he says, was his love for Tommy Russell, the original Little Lord Fauntieroy, and it was to this infatuation for the boy actor that he attributes the beginning of a series of NOW HE LANGUISHES IN A PRISON CELL

Albert is a descendant of one of the bestknown Creole families of Louisiana, and in his day has basked in the sunlight of Mrs. Frank Leslie's smiles, and was on such familiar terms with her that while in her presence he "wore morning jackets that were visions." When Albert was but a stripling his father died, leaving him a fortune, and his bringing up was thrown upon a merchant of Clinton, Ark.

acceptance, and of the Senate's proffer. In conclusion he said:

We are preparing for the Exhibition of a splendid international pageant commemorative of the discovery and settlement of this continent. In the imperial commercial metropolis of the Great Lakes, that urban miracle of the century we are to show, from our own country, we are to show, from our own country, we are to behold from others whatever is most excellent in nature, art or industry. Many a medal will be cast, many a souvenir will be designed in honor of an event so notable. It would be most felicitous should we signalize it by the submission and adoption of this amendment. Thus publishing to this grand commercial council of the world's commerce and exchange that the great republic of the West had given to its people direct control of, the legislative department of the Government. Such an act would be a monument of the age worthy of its genius and fortunes more enduring than the Eiffel tower, more imperishable than the column of Trojan or the arch of Vitus, which have for centuries marked and adorned the site of the Eternal City. Here in the right truly divine of self-government sovereign rule and dominion of the people would be proclaimed, vindicated, justified and glorified in the eyes of all earth's inhabitants to the latest posterity.

Senator Stewart on Free Coluage. Mr. Stewart then proceeded to address the Senate on that part of the President's message relating to free coinage. He said that the President was laboring under a misapprehension when he stated that the advocates of free coinage believed the act of 1890 would raise silver to par and keep it there. That act he observed was emposed there. That act, he observed, was opposed by the Democrats, who had voted solidly against it. The anti-silver Republicans with the votes of the free coinage Repub licans, had passed the act as a compromise measure. The act provided for the redemption of Treasury notes in gold and silver coin, and it was the duty of the ler, Kenna and Gray.

erty for $11,560 cash and began a most romantic career in New York. While his money lasted he lived in princely style and moved in the highest social circles. It was at a reception given by Mrs. Cleveland, in honor of Horace Greely's daughter, that he met Mrs. Frank Leslie. In the intimacy which followed, Mrs. Leslie persuaded him to move to the Gerlach Hotel, where he had apartments in close proximity to her own. He Had an Elegant Time.

According to his own story his board at this hotel cost him $380 per month, and during the year he lived there he paid the during the year he lived there he paid the hotel keeper $7,000, but he says "I had an elegant time." He was a member of Augustin Daly's company at this time, and it was while at this hotel that he met Tommy Russell, the original Lord Faunticroy, with whom he became great friends. When Albert's funds grew short in September last he visited his old home in Clinton, where he succeeded in inducing his former teacher to indorse a draft for him, stating that he had $10,000 to his credit in New York. This draft he cashed, but his teacher had to pay the money, and he was indicted by the grand jury, tried and found

While in jail at Memphis he was visited by a correspondent, who asked him if he had heard from Mrs. Leslie since he had left New York. He said that he had received several letters, but most of them were in his trunk at Philadelphia. He only had a portion of one letter with him; the other part of it, as well as his diary, he accused the detectives of stealing. This letter was written in Mrs. Leslie's well-known handwriting and bears her crest, the reindeer and the motto, "Tout on rein." His Love for Her Was a Safeguard.

It was written April 16, 1890, and the portion remaining in Hope's possession reads as follows:

"MY DEAR ALBERT—I was very glad to get your nice, chatty letter. I took it instead of my breakfast. * * * Waat a struggle you had to get lodgings. It put me in mind of my experience in New Orleans during Mardi Gras, only you were more fortunate. I send you a paper about dear little Tom. My ankle is doing well and I am able to use it without awkwardness. I shall miss you ever so much, dear, when the crowd comes; but, I dare say, the change will be of benefit to you. You are so alone in the word, dear, that the love you have for the boy and myself is your one safeguard, and I want you to cling to it as to a raft in shipwreck, for this is all that keeps you—as the noem runs—from being ruined."

"The other pages—four—were stolen from

"The other pages—four—were stolen from me," said Albert.
"I notice she speaks very affectionately."
"Yes," said the prisoner. "Read this clipping," handing a newspaper clipping which read as follows:
